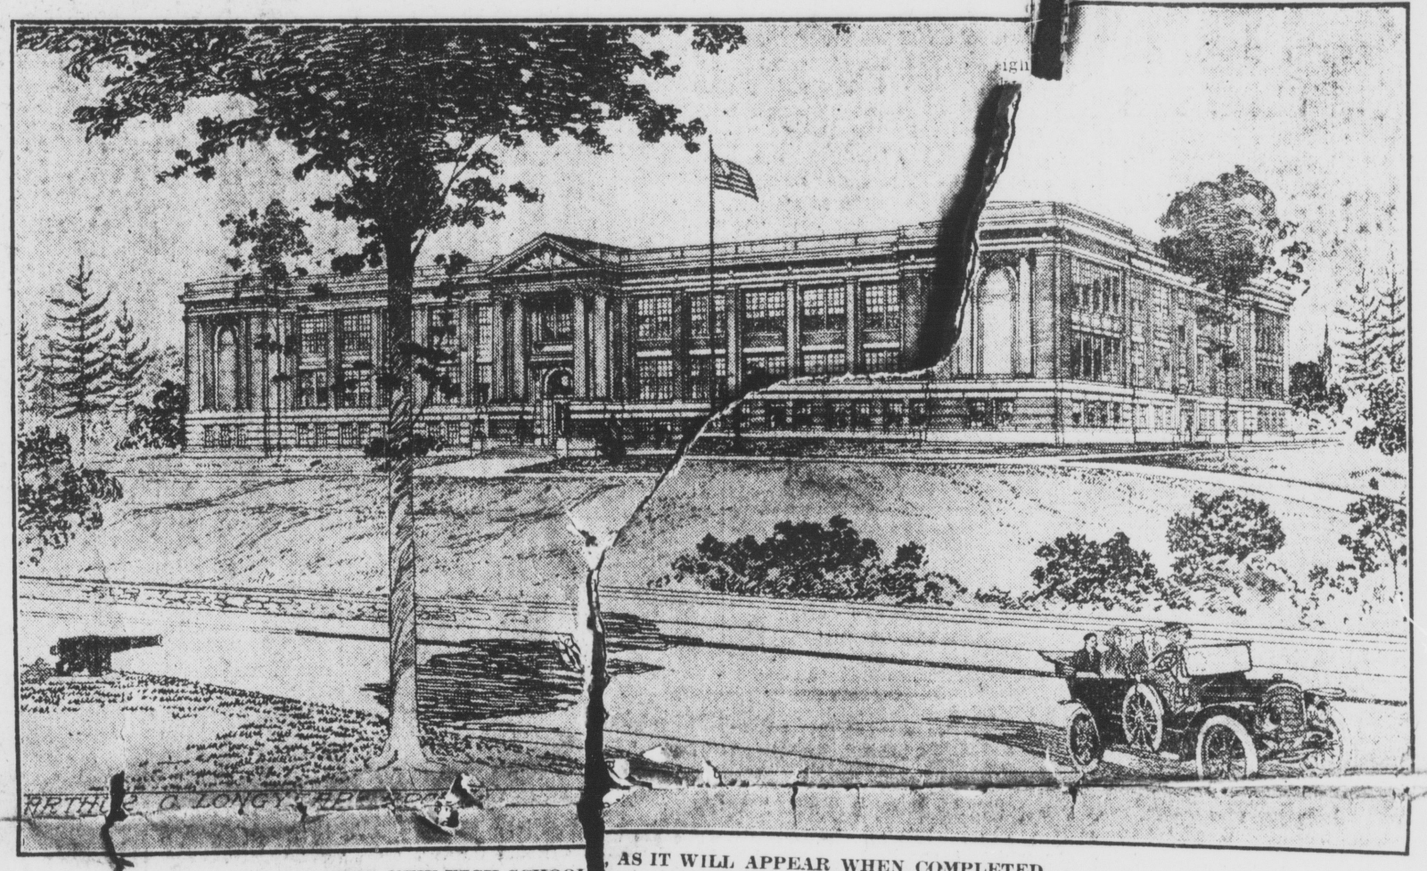
CORNERSTONE OF HIGH SCHOOL LAID THIS AFTERNOON

Addresses Made by President DeWitt of the Board of Education, Mayor Canfield, Judge Clearwater, Superintendent Michael and Former Mayor Irwin.



THE NEW HIGH SCHOOL, AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN COMPLETED.

The cornerstone of the new high school was laid with appropriate ceremony this afternoon before a large and interested audience. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the assembling together of the student bodies of Kingston Academy and Ulster Academy, who meeting at the respective academies marched to the grounds to witness the ceremony that marked the passing of the two academies. President William C. DeWitt, of the board of education, presided, and introduced the speakers. Interesting and able addresses were delivered by Mayor Canfield, ex-Mayor Irwin, Judge A. T. Clearwater and Superintendent M. J. Michael. The Colonial City Band, under the leadership of Professor Muller, rendered a fine patriotic program.

President Dewitt was the first speaker. He said:

President DeWitt's Address.

In behalf of the board of education I desire to express our appreciation of the interest you show by your presence here today. As our old Colonial city so fittingly celebrated the 250th anniversary of its birth in 1908, we are endeavoring today to live up to the traditions of Kingston and the example set on that momentous occasion.

The education of our children is a God given privilege and duty for upon education depend the youth of our land for the up-building of knowledge and for the up-lift of character.

Following along these lines your board of education, owing to the remarkable growth in our academic or high school students to approximately eight hundred (800) entirely outgrowing the present academies, decided to acquire a suitable site and build a structure thereon sufficient in size to care for twelve hundred (1200) students. After several weeks of investigating and negotiating this beautiful property of eight acres was decided upon and acquired. We held a friendly competition among a selected list of competent architects. Some twenty odd prominent architects from various parts of this country submitted plans and our esteemed fellow townsman, Arthur C. Longyear, won out with a design simple in its classic beauty and practical in its interior arrangement.

The next step taken was a friendly competition among a selected list of well known contractors, and a builder, named George T. Kelly, of Yonkers, won the contest by submitting the lowest bid. Mr. Kelly is an experienced builder of schools and has already shown great skill in advancing the work so rapidly. We are proud of the progress Mr. Kelly has made.

This contractor has sub-let a large part of his contract to local men, so that our neighbors, Addison E. Dederick, Albert Mauterstock, and Henry McNamee are identified with the work. John J. Cooney of Harrison, N. J., and the L. F. Bannon Company, as the lowest bidders, secured the heating and ventilating and plumbing contracts respectively. men will do their part with the skill as George T. Kelly.

Right here I want to say a word for those who make these walls and buildings possible. The wage earners are among the great producers of our nation and Kingston appreciates the work of its mechanics and laborers.

To pay for all this an issue of bonds was necessary. This bond sale was advertised six weeks, according to law, and although a crisis arose which brought into question the matter of the first year's interest, not only was the issue over subscribed three times, but all the banks and bankers in our city were represented at the sale and stood ready to take the issue.

Now all this has been accomplished with an eye to economy and the public welfare. We, who have studied and participated in the consummation of the plans of this great hall of learning, can see beyond these bare walls and foundation the building completed and its study halls and class rooms filled with eager boys and girls loving their school and revering their teachers. Our great system of schools and colleges is no longer founded on fear or force but rather on love and liberty. In our beloved Kingston this is especially true.

We shall continue to teach our young to the end that they will grow to be useful men and women with love in their hearts for their city, state and nation. And now we convey to them with pride the privilege to secure the advantages to be obtained in such an institution set amid the beautiful surroundings.

And now a word for Kingston, the city which has accomplished this work and where, at the same time, another $200,000 has been expended in building four other schools. She is one of the fairest of municipalities, her location is superb, her opportunities most promising. She seems to bind to her those citizens who stay away any length of time. And any of us who depart on visits or to reside elsewhere, rejoice always upon our return. We all love our city, she is so pure and clean.

"Mid pleasures or palaces where ever I roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

Mr. DeWitt then introduced Mayor Canfield, who spoke as follows:

Mayor Canfield's Address.

Some of us who are present have passed this place thousands of times; and others hundreds of times; and all of us many times. We have always seen it as a rough, unused, countryfied spot in the center of our city. At the present time a great transformation is under way. Mankind is offering his help to nature in an effort to make the grounds beautiful. At the crown of the terrace we see the beginning of a beautiful edifice. After the completion of this structure, the most delicate animate mechanism will be summoned here to be adjusted, attuned and strengthened. This building is being erected in order that the children of the city of Kingston and vicinity may receive and enjoy the benefits of a complete education. Attempt to analyze that word education if you will and you inevitably reach the conclusion that it is a wonderful word. It is a wonderful word because it is the means whereby wonderful results are obtained. The advantages derived from it are so great and are carried so far that it is an utter impossibility to follow them. It is like tracing the water that flows into a rill, and then into a brook, and then into a creek through forest and meadow, down hills and through valleys into river, and is then carried along by the tide and the current to the mighty ocean where it mingles with the water from every section of the globe.

The very fact that the effect of education is so great makes it desirable that all acquire it. It is a duty not merely to the child alone but to the entire community; and because it is a duty to the community, it is a reasonable and wise exercise of the powers of this state to impose upon parents the legal obligation and duty of allowing every child to receive an education. In order that the provisions of such a law might be successfully carried out, education must be accessible to all and must be gratuitous, that is, it must be gratuitous to the extent that the entire state or an entire political division thereof, or both together, must bear the expense.

The effect of a proper education on the mind of a school child must necessarily favor the making of a good citizen. When a city invests in anything that assists in producing good citizenship and in the elimination of bad citizenship, it is a good investment. The average bad citizen costs a community as much as the average good citizen earns or produces in value. All money properly expended by a city to eliminate the germ of bad citizenship that exists in the minds of embryonic citizens, is such an investment, that the amount thus spent will some day be returned to its treasury with compound interest.

At one time education was the privilege of the few; but now it is the possession and the necessity of the many. At one time it only glimmered in spots; but now it radiates in every hamlet in our land. Nothing has had a more beneficial effect upon the progress of our country than the general diffusion of knowledge. The attitude of our country and of our people has been to let the seeds of knowledge be scattered without stint. Without it our country would not and could not exist as an independent nation. It certainly should not require any ponderous arguments to satisfy anyone's mind that our city should do whatever it can fairly do and whatever reasonably ought to be done in a financial way, and otherwise, for the purpose of properly promoting education.

In 1872 the villages of Kingston and Rondout joined hands, and there was a fusion of the two municipalities that had existed separately in the community for years and years, into one city. The new city thereupon built the city hall yonder for the use of the city and its officers, and to emphasize and solidify the consolidation. There was a union of the executives, legislative and judicial branches of the two villages. A state of oneness did not exist and prevail, however, in all respects. There was no unification of the educational branch of the governments. Thirty years later the different school districts were consolidated, but there still remained the two academies. The existence of these two academies has acted as a wedge to a certain extent in preventing the final cementing of Kingston and Rondout. The two schools, with the attendant rivalry in athletics has always caused a strong school spirit and feeling for their own school spring up and grow in the minds and hearts of the respective scholars each school; and that feeling has more often than otherwise remained with these scholars and even continued to grow after they had left school and had become citizens. In the near future there will be complete unity in the education branches of our municipal government. The act of erecting this structure involves the simplest example in fractions. One-half plus one-half equals one. Our high school department has been divided in halves, and Kingston is now resorting to addition, and is adding and centralizing those two incomplete parts into one complete high school. The past says that it was divided, but the present says that it shall be united in the discernible future.

Old illustrious Kingston, and glorious Ulster, we bid you both good bye as academies. We shall always regard you and your memory both with profound respect and affection. Kingston high school of to-day we now salute and address you and appeal to you. May you send the children of Kingston out into the world with a complete golden chain of education linked to true manhood and true womanhood. May it be such an education that standing in the roadway of conditions then present and existing, they will be able to use their own eyes, ears, hands, tongues and minds, and to so shape the hill of future possibilities, that we all surely meet, that they will be able to safely ascend. May it be such an education that they will not only be able to get ahead themselves, but that they will be enabled to make it more possible for others to follow.

Ex-Mayor Irwin was then introduced by Mr. DeWitt.

Mr. Irwin's Address.

Mr. Irwin said that the work of selecting the present site had been done in spite of selfish criticism on the part of some people who wanted the high school in their back yard, and it had been erected where it would do the most good to the most people. He said that every one pays taxes and the whole city had been thought of when the selection of the present site was made. What was now expected as a slight return for the money expended on the new school was better citizenship and that it was better to build schools for the "boys" than jail later on for the men. Mr. Irwin made a very eloquent address.

Mr. DeWitt then introduced Judge Clearwater, who spoke as follows:

Judge Clearwater's Address.

[illegible] Kingston have cultivated two of the controlling factors of good citizenship—Liberty of conscience and the thorough education of the young—and these important elements of civic life are as notable here today as they were when the city was founded by the Dutch two hundred and fifty-six years ago. It may be doubted whether there be any place in America with only twenty-seven thousand inhabitants where such absolute breadth of faith, sentiment and toleration exists as flourishes in Kingston.

No sooner had the trustees of the freeholders organized their corporation than by resolution they set apart out of their invested corporate funds bearing interest, five hundred pounds sterling, the annual interest of which was to be appropriated toward the maintenance of a Dutch schoolmaster in keeping a school to be absolutely free to the inhabitants of the corporation, and this resolution adopted on the 26th day of March, 1722, is said by historians to be one of the earliest

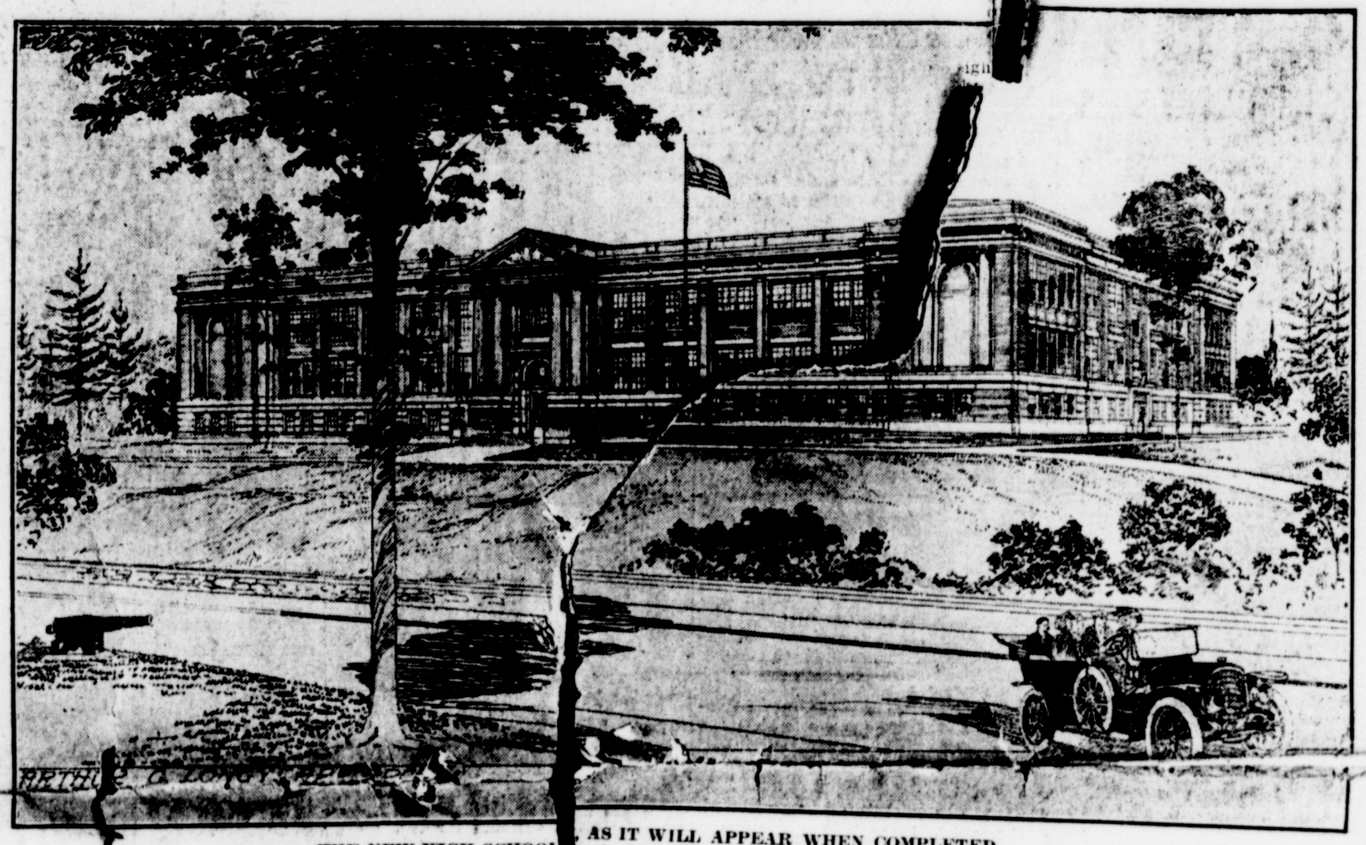
Addresses Made by President DeWitt of the Board of Education, Mayor Canfield, Judge Clearwater, Superintendent Michael and Former Mayor Irwin.



THE NEW HIGH SCHOOL, AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN COMPLETED.

The cornerstone of the new high school was laid with appropriate ceremony this afternoon before a large and interested audience. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the assembling together of the student bodies of Kingston Academy and Ulster Academy, who meeting at the respective academies marched to the grounds to witness the ceremony that marked the passing of the two academies. President William C. DeWitt, of the board of education, presided, and introduced the speakers. Interesting and able addresses were delivered by Mayor Canfield, ex-Mayor Irwin, Judge A. T. Clearwater and Superintendent M. J. Michael. The Colonial City Band, under the leadership of Professor Muller, rendered a fine patriotic program.

President Dewitt was the first speaker. He said:

President DeWitt's Address.

In behalf of the board of education I desire to express our appreciation of the interest you show by your presence here today. As our old Colonial city so fittingly celebrated the 250th anniversary of its birth in 1908, we are endeavoring today to live up to the traditions of Kingston and the example set on that momentous occasion.

The education of our children is a God given privilege and duty for upon education depend the youth of our land for the up-building of knowledge and for the up-lift of character.

Following along these lines your board of education, owing to the remarkable growth in our academic or high school students to approximately eight hundred (800) entirely outgrowing the present academies, decided to acquire a suitable site and build a structure thereon sufficient in size to care for twelve hundred (1200) students. After several weeks of investigating and negotiating this beautiful property of eight acres was decided upon and acquired. We held a friendly competition among a selected list of competent architects. Some twenty odd prominent architects from various parts of this country submitted plans and our esteemed fellow townsman, Arthur C. Longyear, won out with a design simple in its classic beauty and practical in its interior arrangement.

The next step taken was a friendly competition among a selected list of well known contractors, and a builder, named George T. Kelly, of Yonkers, won the contest by submitting the lowest bid. Mr. Kelly is an experienced builder of schools and has already shown great skill in advancing the work so rapidly. We are proud of the progress Mr. Kelly has made.

This contractor has sub-let a large part of his contract to local men, so that our neighbors, Addison E. Dederick, Albert Mauterstock, and Henry McNamee are identified with the work. John J. Cooney of Harrison, N. J., and the L. F. Bannon Company, as the lowest bidders, secured the heating and ventilating and plumbing contracts respectively. We believe all the men will do their part with the same skill as George T. Kelly.

Right here I want to say a word for those who make these walls and buildings possible. The wage earners are among the great producers of our nation and Kingston appreciates the work of its mechanics and laborers.

To pay for all this an issue of bonds was necessary. This bond sale was advertised six weeks, according to law, and although a crisis arose which brought into question the matter of the first year's interest, not only was the issue over subscribed three times, but all the banks and bankers in our city were represented at the sale and stood ready to take the issue.

Now all this has been accomplished with an eye to economy and the public welfare. We, who have studied and participated in the consummation of the plans of this great hall of learning, can see beyond these bare walls and foundation the building completed and its study halls and class rooms filled with eager boys and girls loving their school and revering their teachers. Our great system of schools and colleges is no longer founded on fear or force but rather on love and liberty. In our beloved Kingston this is especially true.

We shall continue to teach our young to the end that they will grow to be useful men and women with love in their hearts for their city, state and nation. And now we convey to them with pride the privilege to secure the advantages to be obtained in such an institution set amid the beautiful surroundings.

And now a word for Kingston, the city which has accomplished this work and where, at the same time, another $200,000 has been expended in building four other schools. She is one of the fairest of municipalities, her location is superb, her opportunities most promising. She seems to bind to her those citizens who stay away any length of time. And any of us who depart on visits or to reside elsewhere, rejoice always upon our return. We all love our city, she is so pure and clean.

"Mid pleasures or palaces where ever I roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

Mr. DeWitt then introduced Mayor Canfield, who spoke as follows:

Mayor Canfield's Address.

Some of us who are present have passed this place thousands of times; and others hundreds of times; and all of us many times. We have always seen it as a rough, unused, countryfied spot in the center of our city. At the present time a great transformation is under way. Mankind is offering his help to nature in an effort to make the grounds beautiful. At the crown of the terrace we see the beginning of a beautiful edifice. After the completion of this structure, the most delicate animate mechanism will be summoned here to be adjusted, attuned and strengthened. This building is being erected in order that the children of the city of Kingston and vicinity may receive and enjoy the benefits of a complete education. Attempt to analyze that word education if you will and you inevitably reach the conclusion that it is a wonderful word. It is a wonderful word because it is the means whereby wonderful results are obtained. The advantages derived from it are so great and are carried so far that it is an utter impossibility to follow them. It is like tracing the water that flows into a rill, and then into a brook, and then into a creek through forest and meadow, down hills and through valleys into river, and is then carried along by the tide and the current to the mighty ocean where it mingles with the water from every section of the globe.

The very fact that the effect of education is so great makes it desirable that all acquire it. It is a duty not merely to the child alone but to the entire community; and because it is a duty to the community, it is a reasonable and wise exercise of the powers of this state to impose upon parents the legal obligation and duty of allowing every child to receive an education. In order that the provisions of such a law might be successfully carried out, education must be accessible to all and must be gratuitous, that is, it must be gratuitous to the extent that the entire state or an entire political division thereof, or both together, must bear the expense.

The effect of a proper education on the mind of a school child must necessarily favor the making of a good citizen. When a city invests in anything that assists in producing good citizenship and in the elimination of bad citizenship, it is a good investment. The average bad citizen costs a community as much as the average good citizen earns or produces in value. All money properly expended by a city to eliminate the germ of bad citizenship that exists in the minds of embryonic citizens, is such an investment, that the amount thus spent will some day be returned to its treasury with compound interest.

At one time education was the privilege of the few; but now it is the possession and the necessity of the many. At one time it only glimmered in spots; but now it radiates in every hamlet in our land. Nothing has had a more beneficial effect upon the progress of our country than the general diffusion of knowledge. The attitude of our country and of our people has been to let the seeds of knowledge be scattered without stint. Without it our country would not and could not exist as an independent nation. It certainly should not require any ponderous arguments to satisfy anyone's mind that our city should do whatever it can fairly do and whatever reasonably ought to be done in a financial way, and otherwise, for the purpose of properly promoting education.

In 1872 the villages of Kingston and Rondout joined hands, and there was a fusion of the two municipalities that had existed separately in the community for years and years, into one city. The new city thereupon built the city hall yonder for the use of the city and its officers, and to emphasize and solidify the consolidation. There was a union of the executives, legislative and judicial branches of the two villages. A state of oneness did not exist and prevail, however, in all respects. There was no unification of the educational branch of the governments. Thirty years later the different school districts were consolidated, but there still remained the two academies. The existence of these two academies has acted as a wedge to a certain extent in preventing the final cementing of Kingston and Rondout. The two schools, with the attendant rivalry in athletics has always caused a strong school spirit and feeling for their own school to spring up and grow in the minds and hearts of the respective scholars in each school; and that feeling has more often than otherwise remained with these scholars and even continued to grow after they had left school and had become citizens. In the near future there will be complete unity in the education branches of our municipal government. The act of erecting this structure involves the simplest example in fractions. One-half plus one-half equals one. Our high school department has been divided into halves, and Kingston is now resorting to addition, and is adding and centralizing those two incomplete parts into one complete high school. The past says that it was divided; but the present says that it shall be united in the discernible future.

Old illustrious Kingston, and glorious Ulster, we bid you both good bye as academies. We shall always regard you and your memory both with profound respect and affection. Kingston high school to be we now salute and address you and appeal to you. May you send the children of Kingston out into the world with a complete golden chain of education linked to true manhood and true womanhood. May it be such an education that, standing in the roadway of conditions then present and existing, they will be able to use their own eyes, ears, hands, tongues and minds, as to so shape the hill of future possibilities, that we all surely meet, that they will be able to safely ascend it. May it be such an education that they will not only be able to get ahead themselves, but that they will be enabled to make it easier possible for others to follow.

Ex-Mayor Irwin was then introduced by Mr. DeWitt.

Mr. Irwin's Address.

Mr. Irwin said that the work of selecting the present site had been done in spite of selfish criticism on the part of some people who wanted the high school in their back yard and it had been erected where it would do the most good to the most people. He said that every one paid taxes and the whole city had been thought of when the selection of the present site was made. What was now expected as a slight return for the money expended on the new school was better citizenship and that it was better to build schools for the "boys" than jail later on for the men. Mr. Irwin made a very eloquent address.

Mr. DeWitt then introduced Judge Clearwater, who spoke as follows:

Judge Clearwater's Address.

[illegible] the people of Kingston have cultivated two of the controlling factors of good citizenship—Liberty of conscience and the thorough education of the young—and these important elements of civic life are as notable here today as they were when the city was founded by the Dutch two hundred and fifty-six years ago. It may be doubted whether there be any place in America with only twenty-seven thousand inhabitants where such absolute breadth of faith, sentiment and toleration exists as flourishes in Kingston.

No sooner had the trustees of the freeholders organized their corporation than by resolution they set apart out of their invested corporate funds bearing interest, five hundred pounds sterling, the annual interest of which was to be appropriated toward the maintenance of a Dutch schoolmaster in keeping a school to be absolutely free to the inhabitants of the corporation, and this resolution adopted on the 26th day of March, 1722, is said by historians to be one of the earliest

EXERCISES AT ST. MARY'S

Exercises were held at St. Mary's cemetery this morning at 10 o'clock. The children of the parish, headed by Barmann fife, drum and bugle corps, marched to the cemetery and decorated the graves. The children also rendered "America," "Star Spangled Banner" and other national anthems. The orator of the day was John T. Loughran of the faculty of Fordham Law School, New York.

"The adjective everywhere used to describe the day we celebrate," said Mr. Loughran, "invites us to put to ourselves the why of the observance of these ceremonies, and the answer may easily be a rather severe commentary on him who merely talks of Memorial Day.

"The presence of the uniformed men who marched with these children this morning, the large display of the national emblem by which certain graves have been marked out above others, the martial music, the gathering of this assemblage—all these, ladies and gentlemen—are commemorative of a time of deeds—and not of words. You must appreciate, then, that it cannot be gratifying to anyone of normal instincts to feel that his part in all this must be the means of demonstrating that times have changed; that this is not, to so great an extent, an era of deeds; that it is, in larger measure, an era of words, in which the talker has a hearing.

"I take it for granted that I need disavow nothing cynical for having said that. The candid admission [illegible] am sure, be misunderstood as a feeble witticism for which this is neither time nor place. The society, for which I speak, has deemed it fitting that a formal statement of the feeling behind these exercises should be part of them, and I am sensible of the honor done me in their assignment of the task.

"Why do we keep Memorial Day? Those who represent the fast thinning blue ranks need not seek for an answer. For them the keeping of the day is preservative of memories of joy and sorrow and heroic youth. But the temporary associations that affected the minds of those who instituted this occasion are gone. Most of us did not share them. Yet, by common consent, we pause here to become conscious of something, and to be grateful for consciousness of it. Why do we keep Memorial Day? What answer is to be made to those who inquire indifferently?

"This day is observed, I take it, that we may have something not to be got from argument. In the remarkable language so eloquently quoted by the youthful gentleman who preceded me, that something is called 'increased devotion.' Obviously people cannot be reasoned into such a condition. After all, only sentient engenders sentiment; and only sentiment of the right kind engenders sentiment of the right kind. We are convinced that those we honor today because they gave the last full measure of devotion' acted rightly. We know, too, that the conviction cannot be made good to others through the medium of words alone. Accordingly that conviction is put into impressive exterform.

"Can it be doubted that the day serves its purpose well? Ladies and gentlemen, the feelings stirred by the funeral march and the flag-marked graves at this time every year are more valuable in inspiration of [illegible] kind than the industrial [illegible] achievements of a century chasten a condition begot of uninterrupted peace and prosperity—a condition that otherwise might in turn beget an elevating trade which would take dignity from sentiment and reality and passion out of life.

"If this is the purpose of the day, this locality need yield to no other in reasons for the celebration of it."

The speaker paid a tribute to the Ulster county regiments in the Civil war. Of the Ulster Guard he said.

"It is not hard to understand the promptitude of their first enlistment. The feelings of men are drawn by an indefinable charm to the country of their nativity. Patriotism, for that reason is always a paramount virtue, and when first excited by national peril, carries all before it. But when the 'Ulster Guard' had returned, at the expiration of the three months for which it first enlisted, there were no doubts as to what would be expected of it in the event of a second enlistment. Yet, the Old Twentieth, which had numbered about eight hundred when it left Rondout in April '61, marched away again in October, 987 strong. There was no hysteria, admirable or otherwise, about that second march. The marchers knew to what they were going, and the story of their conduct in the several years following is a story of reasons why this community should keep Memorial Day."

Mr. Loughran denied that a proper observation of Memorial Day fosters a military spirit. The Civil War, he said, was the best answer for the jingoes who assert that the strength of a nation decays unless it is frequently at war, for, coming after years of peace and prosperity, it had shown that the spirit and virility of American patriotism had not been lessened.

Navigation Notes.

The steamer Mary Powell was a trifle late in arriving at Rondout on Friday evening, having a large number of holiday visitors on board. Some of the passengers were bound for the Catskills.

This afternoon the Washington Irving came up the river with an excursion from New York, arriving here about 2:30 o'clock. The Hendrick Hudson arrived about an hour later and returned to New York.

The steamer Newburgh took an excursion from the Central Hudson dock to Poughkeepsie and Newburgh at noon today. The excursionists will return on the Homer Ramsdell this evening. Sunday the Romer and Ramsdell will both leave here at 6 p. m. for New York.

When the Elihu Bunker left here at 7 a. m. today she had a large number of excursionists aboard bound for Poughkeepsie.

Concert at Woodstock Tonight.

The Kingston Y. M. C. A. Glee Club will give a concert at the Firemen's Hall at Woodstock this evening at 8 o'clock. The club is composed of twenty-six young men led by Floyd Vogt. Miss Ethel Mauterstock, a graduate of Syracuse University, will assist the club as reader. An excellent program is in store for the people of Woodstock.

PLATTEKILL.

Plattekill, May 30.—The entertainment given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society Thursday evening was well attended and much enjoyed. Also the entertainment given by the "Daisy Club" girls at Miss Bertha Decker's home.

Master Harrigan Price of New York is visiting with his grandparents, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Lovejoy.

The Misses Glennie Wager and Helena Gerow spent Saturday with Mrs. N. J. Horton.

The Daisy Club will hold its next meeting at the home of Miss Lillian S. Fowler.

Mrs. Ransel J. Wager and daughter, Ruth, of Poughkeepsie, are visiting her father, John Nabor.

A surprise party was given Miss Lillian Danielson at her home on Friday evening and although it is rather late, more parties are being planned.

A number of our people attended the Barnum & Bailey circus in Newburgh on Friday.

Fred H. Fowler was a visitor in Rosendale and Kingston last week.

STEINWAY

One of the contributory reasons why the Steinway Piano is recognized as may be found in the fact that since its inception it has been made under the supervision of members of the Steinway family, and embodied in it are certain improvements found in no other instrument.

It is not merely the combination of wood, felts and metals, but it the knowing how to combine them in order to produce the highest musical results which has made the Steinway the piano by which all others are measured.

THE STEINWAY

is a work of creative art which stands alone—unqualifiedly the best.

The children also rendered "America," "Star Spangled Banner" and other national anthems. The orator of the day was John T. Loughran of the faculty of Fordam Law School, New York.

"The adjective everywhere used to describe the day we celebrate," said Mr. Loughran, "invites us to put to ourselves the why of the observance of these ceremonies, and the answer may easily be a rather severe commentary on him who merely talks on Memorial Day.

"The presence of the uniformed men who marched with these children this morning, the large display of the national emblem by which certain graves have been marked out above others, the martial music, the gathering of this assemblage—all these, ladies and gentlemen—are commemorative of a time of deeds—and not of words. You must appreciate, then, that it cannot be gratifying to anyone of normal instincts to feel that his part in all this must be the means of demonstrating that times have changed; that this is not, to so great an extent, an era of deeds; that it is, in larger measure, an era of words, in which the talker has a hearing.

"I take it for granted that I need disavow nothing cynical for having said that. The candid admission [illegible] this [illegible] am sure, be misunderstood as a feeble witticism for which this is neither time nor place. The society, for which I speak, has deemed it fitting that a formal statement of the feeling behind these exercises should be part of them, and I am sensible of the honor done me in their assignment of the task.

"Why do we keep Memorial Day? Those who represent the fast thinning blue ranks need not seek for an answer. For them the keeping of the day is preservative of memories of joy and sorrow and heroic youth. But the temporary associations that affected the minds of those who instituted this occasion are gone. Most of us did not share them. Yet, by common consent, we pause here to become conscious of something, and to be grateful for consciousness of it. Why do we keep Memorial Day? What answer is to be made to those who inquire indifferently?

"This day is observed, I take it, that we may have something not to be got from argument. In the remarkable language so eloquently quoted by the youthful gentleman who preceded me, that something is called 'increased devotion.' Obviously people cannot be reasoned into such a condition. After all, only sentient engenders sentiment; and only sentiment of the right kind engenders sentiment of the right kind. We are convinced that those we honor today because they gave the last full measure of devotion' acted rightly. We know, too, that the conviction cannot be made good to others through the medium of words alone. Accordingly that conviction is put into impressive exterform.

"Can it be doubted that the day serves its purpose well? Ladies and gentlemen, the feelings stirred by the funeral march and the flag-marked graves at this time every year are more valuable in inspiration of that kind than the industrial achievements of a century chasten a condition begot of uninterrupted peace and prosperity—a condition that otherwise might in turn beget an elevating trade which would take dignity from sentiment and reality and passion out of life.

"If this is the purpose of the day, this locality need yield to no other in reasons for the celebration of it."

The speaker paid a tribute to the Ulster county regiments in the Civil war. Of the Ulster Guard he said.

"It is not hard to understand the promptitude of their first enlistment. The feelings of men are drawn by an indefinable charm to the country of their nativity. Patriotism, for that reason is always a paramount virtue, and when first excited by national peril, carries all before it. But when the 'Ulster Guard' had returned, at the expiration of the three months for which it first enlisted, there were no doubts as to what would be expected of it in the event of a second enlistment. Yet, the Old Twentieth, which had numbered about eight hundred when it left Rondout in April '61, marched away again in October, 987 strong. There was no hysteria, admirable or otherwise, about that second march. The marchers knew to what they were going, and the story of their conduct in the several years following is a story of reasons why this community should keep Memorial Day."

Mr. Loughran denied that a proper observation of Memorial Day fosters a military spirit. The Civil War, he said, was the best answer for the jingoes who assert that the strength of a nation decays unless it is frequently at war, for, coming after years of peace and prosperity, it had shown that the spirit and virility of American patriotism had not been lessened.

Navigation Notes.

The steamer Mary Powell was a trifle late in arriving at Rondout on Friday evening, having a large number of holiday visitors on board. Some of the passengers were bound for the Catskills.

This afternoon the Washington Irving came up the river with an excursion from New York, arriving here about 2:30 o'clock. The Hendrick Hudson arrived about an hour later and returned to New York.

The steamer Newburgh took an excursion from the Central Hudson dock to Poughkeepsie and Newburgh at noon today. The excursionists will return on the Homer Ramsdell this evening. Sunday the Romer and Ramsdell will both leave here at 6 p. m. for New York.

When the Elihu Bunker left here at 7 a. m. today she had a large number of excursionists aboard bound for Poughkeepsie.

Concert at Woodstock Tonight.

The Kingston Y. M. C. A. Glee Club will give a concert at the Firemen's Hall at Woodstock this evening at 8 o'clock. The club is composed of twenty-six young men led by Floyd Vogt. Miss Ethel Mauterstock, a graduate of Syracuse University, will assist the club as reader. An excellent program is in store for the people of Woodstock.

PLATTEKILL.

Plattekill, May 30.—The entertainment given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society Thursday evening was well attended and much enjoyed. Also the entertainment given by the "Daisy Club" girls at Miss Bertha Decker's home.

Master Harrigan Price of New York is visiting with his grandparents, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Lovejoy.

The Misses Glennie Wager and Helena Gerow spent Saturday with Mrs. N. J. Horton.

The Daisy Club will hold its next meeting at the home of Miss Lillian S. Fowler.

Mrs. Ransel J. Wager and daughter, Ruth, of Poughkeepsie, are visiting her father, John Nabor.

A surprise party was given Miss Lillian Danielson at her home on Friday evening and although it is rather late, more parties are being planned.

A number of our people attended the Barnum & Bailey circus in Newburgh on Friday.

Fred H. Fowler was a visitor in Rosendale and Kingston last week.

STEINWAY

One of the contributory reasons why the Steinway Piano is recognized as may be found in the fact that since its inception it has been made under the supervision of members of the Steinway family, and embodied in it are certain improvements found in no other instrument.

It is not merely the combination of wood, felts and metals, but it the knowing how to combine them in order to produce the highest musical results which has made the Steinway the piano by which all others are measured.

THE STEINWAY

is a work of creative art which stands alone—unqualifiedly the best.

EMPRESS OF IRELAND DEATH LIST NUMBERS 1032

Revised Figures Show That 355 Were Saved---Captain in Hospital in a Critical Condition ---Bodies of More Than Half of the Dead Have Been Recovered.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Quebec, May 30.—The death list in the Empress of Ireland disaster will be 1,032, according to information given out today by the Canadian Pacific line, owners of the Empress. The ship carried 1,387 persons and, according to her owners the following were saved:

First class passengers 18, second and third class passengers 131. Crew saved 206.

Quebec, May 30.—Nine hundred and ten men, women and children lost their lives in the sinking of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland after she was rammed by the collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence river, according to a revised list of the fatalities made up here today.

Four hundred and seventy-seven persons were saved, most of the survivors being in this city, cared for by the municipal authorities and the officials of the Canadian Pacific line.

The collier Storstad arrived here today under her own steam but her smashed bows gave terrific and tragic evidence of the part she played in the greatest marine disaster St. Lawrence shipping has ever known.

An investigation of the disaster is expected to be made by the Dominion government, not only to place the responsibility but to lay the ground work for legislation to provide further safeguards for life at sea.

All the stories told here by survivors emphasize one big fact:

That the victims faced death bravely in the fog and darkness of early morning and that there was no panic. As the Storstad drew back the water rushed into the gap made by her sharp steel prow and in less than 15 minutes the liner had disappeared from view in ninety feet of water.

The survivors find no fault with the officers of the liner. All that could be done was accomplished.

The Lady Grey, a government steamer, slowly crawled toward this port today with about 250 dead bodies which were picked up near the scene of the disaster The Dominion and provincial authorities united to care for the dead to hasten identification of the bodies.

Most of the dead were found afloat on the water. Some were life preservers and others were floating on wreckage. Practically all of them were in their night clothing, as they had no time to dress after the ship was rammed.

While the bodies are being scanned by grief stricken men and women, engaged in a tragic and gruesome search for relatives or friends, the coroner's inquest will open at Rimouski.

A cry is going up on all sides for a rigid investigation of the tragedy, the chief points being:

1—Was the Empress of Ireland a safe vessel?

2—Were the vessels traveling at cautious speed because of the fog?

3—Were any of the international rules of safety at sea violated by the officers of either ship?

Captain H. G. Kendall, of the Empress of Ireland, who was picked up, is in the hospital at Rimouski in a serious condition.

Three hundred coffins are being prepared for the dead upon the Lady Grey and the Storstad. Carpenters worked all night at their task of casket making and undertakers were busily engaged in their preparations for wholesale embalming.

In the temporary morgue, where the work of identificaton will be carried on, trestles have been placed in rows upon which to place the coffins. That house of death will see many a scene of heart shaking pathos within the next few days.

The morgue has been draped in black. Seldom in the history of Quebec have such scenes been enacted as took place last night when 400 survivors arrived here by train from Rimouski. A long line of military ambulances awaited the train for word had been telegraphed ahead that some of the survivors were seriously ill from exposure, the shock and the terror of their experience. Thirty survivors had to be left behind at Rimouski because they wee too ill to be moved.

Men and women were dishevelled and excited. The fright of their escape was still on them and the look of nightmare was in their eyes. Women in torn, dirty dresses, with their hair hanging down their backs clung desperately to friends or relatives. Occasionally they burst into noisy sobbing as the picture of the tragedy again rose up in their minds. There was not a hat in the crowd. Some of the men were without coats and shoes. The Canadian Pacific line had provided sweaters and blankets and nearly every one was equipped with these articles of protection.

The saddest sights were the little children, who had been made orphans by the disaster. They were too young to comprehend the depth of the tragedy, but they realized that some big calamity had come into their little lives and with faces filled with wonder they sat staring at the evidences of grief about them.

The officials of the Canadian Pacific line are working with all possible speed and energy. They are giving their personal attention to the disaster. Three boats are kept cruising over and around the spot where the Empress lies ready to pick up any bodies which rise to the surface. Divers will be sent down to attempt to reach the corpses held in the ship and to examine the nature of the gash inflicted by the collier's stem.

Fewer than half of the dead had been recovered today and it was believed that some of the corpses never would be recovered. But as fast as the river gave up its dead the bodies were taken ashore and prepared for identification.

The temporary mortuary was formerly used as a freight shed.

The first boat to arrive from the scene of the disaster brought only 11 living. Of these, one, a woman, died as they lifted her to the wharf and a little later a man died.

Then came the Lady Evelyn. On her deck among the unconscious living lay 135 corpses. Then came the tug Eureka with sixty more bodies and the morgue had to be enlarged as the original building had been filled.

Special funeral services will be held here tomorrow for the dead who went down with the Empress. Tomorrow will be a day of mourning throughout the Canadian branch of the Salvation Army, for more than 150 members were drowned in the disaster.

COMMENCEMENT WEEK PROGRAM

The board of education at its regular meeting held on Friday evening awarded contracts for the annual repairs to the city schools during the vacation season amounting to $1,365, adopted a program for commencement week and a school calendar for the school year 1914-191... All of the members of the board were present with the exception of ... Bernstein who is attending the ... conference at Lake Monon...

The bids for the annual repairs were opened. Three bids were received for the carpentry work at the various schools as follows: T. I. Rifenbary & Son, $230; W. D. Costello, $184; Buckley & Schryver, $224. Mr. Costello being the lowest bidder he was awarded the contract.

Brown & Dressell were the only firm to submit a bid on the plumbing and were awarded the contract their bid being $537.

Three bids were received for the painting to be done during vacation at schools No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

The bid of Henry Stryker covered schools No. 1, $94. and schools No. 5, $286 a total for the two schools of $374.

Fred W. Beal submitted a bid as follows: school No. 1, $68; school 3, amounting to $594, divided as follows: school No. 1, $68; school 5, $136; school 4, $45; school 6 on $179; and a lump sum of $166 on schools 6, 7, and 8.

Robert McKittrick submitted a total bid amounting to $1,205. divided as follows: On school 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 a lump sum of $885; and on schools 6, 7, and 8 a lump sum of $320.

Mr. Halloran of the building committee thought that the bid of Mr. Beal was so low that it would bear investigation as it was $611. lower than that of Mr. McKittrick.

Mr. Salzmann said that Mr. Beal should be awarded the contract as he believed he would do the work in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Beal who was present said that through the negligence of some painters there had arisen a misunderstanding some years ago but this year if awarded the contract it would receive his personal supervision.

Mr. Weiss seconded the motion made by Mr. Salzmann which when put to a vote was unanimously carried and Mr. Beal was awarded the contract.

The building committee reported favorably in regard to accepting the bid of the Chamberlain Metal Strip Company to equip school No. 6 with metal strips for $627 and the company was awarded the contract.

Mr. Kelder of the finance committee reported bills audited for the monh amounting to $8,997.94, which were ordered paid.

The question of asking the water board for a rebate on the water bill during the vacation season was talked over and finally referred to the building committee to take up with the water commissioners.

The committee on supplies were authorized to purchase the janitors' supplies as needed from time to time without asking for bids as the amount involved was small.

...OF THE DISASTER

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Montreal, Que., May 30.—With bowed heads and tremulous voices, survivors of the Empress of Ireland disaster today told stories of their experiences which out-thrilled anything in fiction.

Tales appallingly pitiful were told by men and women. Some cried out in their anguish that they did not wish to be reminded of the tragedy.

Of the 400 survivors who reached Quebec last night, a number come to Montreal today.

One of the tragic features of the disaster is nine year old Grace Hannigan, who was made an orphan by the tragedy.

Major Atwell, who with his wife, have temporarily adopted the little girl, told the story.

"Hannigan was on the deck with his wife and I saw them," said Atwell. "There was little Grace clinging to her mother's skirt and crying. There was so much confusion and excitement that I don't know why I paid particular attention to this little girl. Suddenly I saw the girl separated from her parents and then we leaped into the water and were later picked up. I did not see Grace again until we met her on the train going from Rimouski to Quebec. The girl told us that when the boat listed she fell into the water. She managed to cling to a large piece of wood until she was picked up by a life boat.

"When the shock came we did not think it was anything serious. We were both aroused from our sleep and probably would have returned to sleep again but for the heavy list of the ship. We got up and put on life preservers and went on deck. I wore only my underclothing, being covered with a thick steamer rug. It took only a few minutes to see the seriousness of the disaster.

"On deck, officers and seamen were running about shouting orders and half dressed people were looking for the life preservers and life boats. The ship settled rapidly on her side. We could hear the water rushing into the hold through the big, ragged gash that the Storstad had cut. In the fog, a short distance away, we could make out the Storstad with her bow smashed.

"The sparks sputtered from the wireless mast for a few moments, then died out, apparently in the middle of a message for help.

"We slipped or were thrown into the water. I told my wife to hold on to my undershirt and I started to swim away from the ship to avoid the suction when she went down. I went under the water three times, but managed to swim to make a life boat."

The experience of Louis E. Gosselin, a Montreal lawyer, was an unusual one.

"I never even got wet," said Gosselin. "A friend and I were occupying a suite on the top deck a little aft. We were thrown from our berths by the violent pitch of the vessel and lost no time in getting on deck. There was a lot of confusion but the officers were doing all they could to launch boats and get the women and children away first. The ship was almost on her side and some of the lifeboats could not be reached. While trying to launch a boat my feet went out from under me and I slid down the inclined deck on my back. I thought sure I was going into the water. Suddenly a collapsible life raft began sliding down the deck in my wake. Heavens only knows where it came from. It gained on me and at the edge of the deck it slid under me and we went over into the water with myself on the raft. I did not touch the water and was soon picked up.

"I was going to England on a business trip and expect to make another start in a week or so."

Mrs. Kinerney of Toronto was described as "one of the bravest women of the lot" by an officer of the sunken ship, told her story in a half pathetic, half humorous way.

"I lost my savings of 18 years which I was taking to England with me, but weeping won't bring it back" said she philosophically.

"There were four girls in my cabin. Suddenly there was a big bump. We all jumped out of bed thinking the ship had grazed an iceberg. Thoughts of the Titanic disaster entered our minds. I ran out into the corridor and heard people crying and shouting for help. The ship was almost on her side, the decks being slanted at such a steep slope that it was almost impossible to stand. I saw a man lay down and slide down the deck into the water and I thought I would do the same. So I did. A man swam up to me to give me assistance. But just then a boat came up and I was taken on board."

"The impact was strong enough to wake us, but not severe enough to knock a man from his feet" said Major Morris, one of the few survivors of the Salvation Army party.

"It was a grind, rather than a crash and the Storstad struck us almost amidships. The grinding and ripping lasted about a half minute."

Lawrence Irving, son of the late Henry Irving, sacrificed his life in an attempt to save his wife.

Few of those who came out of the tragedy alive had as hard experiences as befell Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Greenway of the Salvation Army band. During the brief time that elapsed between the foundering of the Empress and their rescue each gave the other up as lost.

"I gave up all thought of saving myself and wecomed the thought of death" sad Mr. Greenway.

"I was in the water with a life preserver on and once I started to undo the straps so that my body would sink. Little did I know then that my wife was floating in the water almost at my side.

"An officer motioned us to go on deck immediately after the collision" said Mrs. Greenway. "We threw on a few wraps and went outside without feeling nervous or alarmed. However, we had no sooner reached the deck than we realized that we were in a dangerous predicament. People were rushing about and shouting and in the confusion I became separated from my husband. I don't know exactly what happened but I found myself in the water with a life preserver on. I prayed fervently for the deliverance of my husband and myself but I did not see him until long afterward.

They were on their honeymoon, having been married in Toronto last week.

Band Sergeant John Fowler of Vancouver, who was saved, told a thrilling tale of being carried down in the vortex when the ship sank. He had to struggle with corpses and wreckage to regain the surface.

"I could not sleep well and I was looking through the porthole of my stateroom when suddenly a big black shape loomed up out of the fog," said Fowler.

"It seemed only a few feet away but the distance must have been greater. Then there was a jar and a grinding, rending jolt. Before I fully realized what had happened the water began to come into my cabin. Rushing out of my stateroom I made my way up the main companionway. I saw a girl with a baby in her arms and a child of about six years following her. She implored me to show her how to put on a life preserver, so I stopped and buckled a life belt around her. I waited on board the Empress until the water closed over her decks and then jumped, but I was too late. The suction carried me down and down until I thought my lungs and eardrums would burst. Bodies cold and clamy bumped into me but I could not think of that in my dreadful battle for life. Once a big husky man threw his arm around me while we were still under the water and I had to fight to break his grip. Oh, it was dreadful, that mad battle against an unseen foe amidst those corpses and wreckage beneath the waters of the St. Lawrence. The pain was greater than anything I had ever known and it seemed ages before I rose and my head popped through the surface. The first breath of fresh air was better than anything I had ever known before. I was exhausted when a life boat picked me up."

Edward Shannon, a fireman, told of the courage of Captain Kendall.

"Captain Kendall stood upon the bridge throughout all the terrible scene directing affairs just as cooly as though nothing had happened," said Shannon.

"With a megaphone to his mouth the captain ordered his men to swing the life-boats overboard and to see that the women and children got away first. He was upon the bridge when the vessel went under the water."

Clinton R. Burt, an automobile manufacturer of Toronto, described the death of Irving as follows:

"I ran upon the promenade deck as soon as the collision occurred," said Burt. "The water had put the lights out and in the darkness we could just barely make out the moving figures. I had a difficult time finding the life preservers and while I was searching I met Irving and Mrs. Irving.

"I told them they had better don life-belts at once as the ship was in great danger and would probably go down. Irving ran back to his stateroom and came out with two life preservers. I put one of the belts upon him and he put the other one upon his wife. We went outside but could hardly walk because the deck sloped so. I managed to run up the deck and grasp the rail. Irving endeavored to follow with Mrs. Irving but the vessel lurched and both went into the water. I think the current must have carried them under the ship. The last glimpse I had of Irving he was trying to save his wife.

"He might have saved himself but for his bravery and devotion to Mrs. Irving. I jumped into the water and heard a voice crying nearby. It was a young girl who later turned out to be Miss T. Townsend of New Zealand. I helped her and we were soon picked up."

J. Patrick, of Toronto, told how he swam among the drowning men and women who clutched at him and raved in their terror of death.

"They were around me like flies," said Patrick.

"I tried to get hold of a little boy but he was insane from fear and struggled so I had to let him go.

"The ship pitched heavily just before she disappeared as though she were rolling in death agony. The water put out the fires in the boilers within a few minutes after the crash."

EMPRESS OF IRELAND DEATH LIST NUMBERS 1032

Revised Figures Show That 355 Were Saved---Captain in Hospital in a Critical Condition ---Bodies of More Than Half of the Dead Have Been Recovered.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Quebec, May 30.—The death list in the Empress of Ireland disaster will be 1,032, according to information given out today by the Canadian Pacific line, owners of the Empress. The ship carried 1,387 persons and, according to her owners the following were saved:

First class passengers 18, second and third class passengers 131. Crew saved 206.

Quebec, May 30.—Nine hundred and ten men, women and children lost their lives in the sinking of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland after she was rammed by the collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence river, according to a revised list of the fatalities made up here today.

Four hundred and seventy-seven persons were saved, most of the survivors being in this city, cared for by the municipal authorities and the officials of the Canadian Pacific line.

The collier Storstad arrived here today under her own steam but her smashed bows gave terrific and tragic evidence of the part she played in the greatest marine disaster St. Lawrence shipping has ever known.

An investigation of the disaster is expected to be made by the Dominion government, not only to place the responsibility but to lay the ground work for legislation to provide further safeguards for life at sea.

All the stories told here by survivors emphasize one big fact:

That the victims faced death bravely in the fog and darkness of early morning and that there was no panic. As the Storstad drew back the water rushed into the gap made by her sharp steel prow and in less than 15 minutes the liner had disappeared from view in ninety feet of water.

The survivors find no fault with the officers of the liner. All that could be done was accomplished.

The Lady Grey, a government steamer, slowly crawled toward this port today with about 250 dead bodies which were picked up near the scene of the disaster The Dominion and provincial authorities united to care for the dead to hasten identification of the bodies.

Most of the dead were found afloat on the water. Some wore life preservers and others were floating on wreckage. Practically all of them were in their night clothing, as they had no time to dress after the ship was rammed.

While the bodies are being scanned by grief stricken men and women, engaged in a tragic and grewsome search for relatives or friends, the coroner's inquest will open at Rimouski.

A cry is going up on all sides for a rigid investigation of the tragedy, the chief points being:

1—Was the Empress of Ireland a safe vessel?

2—Were the vessels traveling at cautious speed because of the fog?

3—Were any of the international rules of safety at sea violated by the officers of either ship?

Captain H. G. Kendall, of the Empress of Ireland, who was picked up, is in the hospital at Rimouski in a serious condition.

Three hundred coffins are being prepared for the dead upon the Lady Grey and the Storstad. Carpenters worked all night at their task of casket making and undertakers were busily engaged in their preparations for wholesale embalming.

In the temporary morgue, where the work of identificaton will be carried on, trestles have been placed in rows upon which to place the coffins. That house of death will see many a scene of heart shaking pathos within the next few days.

The morgue has been draped in black. Seldom in the history of Quebec have such scenes been enacted as took place last night when 400 survivors arrived here by train from Rimouski. A long line of military ambulances awaited the train for word had been telegraphed ahead that some of the survivors were seriously ill from exposure, the shock and the terror of their experience. Thirty survivors had to be left behind at Rimouski because they wee too ill to be moved.

Men and women were dishevelled and excited. The fright of their escape was still on them and the look of nightmare was in their eyes. Women in torn, dirty dresses, with their hair hanging down their backs clung desperately to friends or relatives. Occasionally they burst into noisy sobbing as the picture of the tragedy again rose up in their minds. There was not a hat in the crowd. Some of the men were without coats and shoes. The Canadian Pacific line had provided sweaters and blankets and nearly every one was equipped with these articles of protection.

The saddest sights were the little children, who had been made orphans by the disaster. They were too young to comprehend the depth of the tragedy, but they realized that some big calamity had come into their little lives and with faces filled with wonder they sat staring at the evidences of grief about them.

The officials of the Canadian Pacific line are working with all possible speed and energy. They are giving their personal attention to the disaster. Three boats are kept cruising over and around the spot where the Empress lies ready to pick up any bodies which rise to the surface. Divers will be sent down to attempt to reach the corpses held in the ship and to examine the nature of the gash inflicted by the collier's stem.

Fewer than half of the dead had been recovered today and it was believed that some of the corpses never would be recovered. But as fast as the river gave up its dead the bodies were taken ashore and prepared for identification.

The temporary mortuary was formerly used as a freight shed.

The first boat to arrive from the scene of the disaster brought only 11 living. Of these, one, a woman, died as they lifted her to the wharf and a little later a man died.

Then came the Lady Evelyn. On her deck among the unconscious living lay 135 corpses. Then came the tug Eureka with sixty more bodies and the morgue had to be enlarged as the original building had been filled.

Special funeral services will be held here tomorrow for the dead who went down with the Empress. Tomorrow will be a day of mourning throughout the Canadian branch of the Salvation Army, for more than 150 members were drowned in the disaster.

COMMENCEMENT WEEK PROGRAM

The board of education at its regular meeting held on Friday evening awarded contracts for the annual repairs to the city schools during the vacation season amounting to $1,365, adopted a program for commencement week and a school calendar for the school year 1914-191... All of the members of the board were present with the exception of ... Bernstein who is attending the ... conference at Lake Monon...

The bids for the annual repairs were opened. Three bids were received for the carpentry work at the various schools as follows: T. I. Rifenbary & Son, $230; V. D. Costello, $184; Buckley & Schryver, $224. Mr. Costello being the lowest bidder he was awarded the contract.

Brown & Dressell were the only firm to submit a bid on the contract and were awarded the contract their bid being $537.

Three bids were received for the painting to be done during vacation at schools No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

The bid of Henry Stryker covered schools No. 1, $94, and school No. 5, $280 a total for the two schools of $374.

Fred W. Beal submitted a bid as follows: amounting to $594, divided as follows: school No. 1, $68; school 3, $136; school 4, $45; school 5, $179; and a lump sum of $166 on schools 6, 7, and 8.

Robert McKittrick submitted a total bid amounting to $1,205, divided as follows: On school 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 a lump sum of $885; and on schools 6, 7, and 8 a lump sum of $320.

Mr. Halloran of the building committee thought that the bid of Mr. Beal was so low that it would bear investigation as it was $611. lower than that of Mr. McKittrick.

Mr. Salzmann said that Mr. Beal should be awarded the contract as he believed he would do the work in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Beal who was present said that through the negligence of some painters there had arisen a misunderstanding some years ago but this year if awarded the contract it would receive his personal supervision.

Mr. Weiss seconded the motion made by Mr. Salzmann which when put to a vote was unanimously carried and Mr. Beal was awarded the contract.

The building committee reported favorably in regard to accepting the bid of the Chamberlain Metal Strip Company to equip school No. 6 with metal strips for $627 and the company was awarded the contract.

Mr. Kelder of the finance committee reported bills audited for the month amounting to $8,997.94, which were ordered paid.

The question of asking the water board for a rebate on the water bill during the vacation season was talked over and finally referred to the building committee to take up with the water commissioners.

The committee on supplies were authorized to purchase the janitors' supplies as needed from time to time without asking for bids as the amount involved was small.

Commencement Week Program.

The teachers' committee recommended the following program for commencement, which was adopted:

Sunday evening, June 21—Baccalaureate sermon in St. James M. E. Church.

OF THE DISASTER

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Montreal, Que., May 30.—With bowed heads and tremulous voices, survivors of the Empress of Ireland disaster today told stories of their experiences which out-thrilled anything in fiction.

Tales appallingly pitiful were told by men and women. Some cried out in their anguish that they did not wish to be reminded of the tragedy.

Of the 400 survivors who reached Quebec last night, a number come to Montreal today.

One of the tragic features of the disaster is nine year old Grace Hannigan, who was made an orphan by the tragedy.

Major Atwell, who with his wife, have temporarily adopted the little girl, told the story.

"Hannigan was on the deck with his wife and I saw them," said Atwell. "There was little Grace clinging to her mother's skirt and crying. There was so much confusion and excitement that I don't know why I paid particular attention to this little girl. Suddenly I saw the girl separated from her parents and then we leaped into the water and were later picked up. I did not see Grace again until we met her on the train going from Rimouski to Quebec. The girl told us that when the boat listed she fell into the water. She managed to cling to a large piece of wood until she was picked up by a life boat.

"When the shock came we did not think it was anything serious. We were both aroused from our sleep and probably would have returned to sleep again but for the heavy list of the ship. We got up and put on life preservers and went on deck. I wore only my underclothing, being covered with a thick steamer rug. It took only a few minutes to see the seriousness of the disaster.

"On deck, officers and seamen were running about shouting orders and half dressed people were looking for the life preservers and life boats. The ship settled rapidly on her side. We could hear the water rushing into the hold through the big, ragged gash that the Storstad had cut. In the fog, a short distance away, we could make out the Storstad with her bow smashed.

"The sparks spluttered from the wireless mast for a few moments, then died out, apparently in the middle of a message for help.

"We slipped or were thrown into the water. I told my wife to hold on to my undershirt and I started to swim away from the ship to avoid the suction when she went down. I went under the water three times, but managed to swim to make a life boat."

The experience of Louis E. Gosselin, a Montreal lawyer, was an unusual one.

"I never even got wet," said Gosselin. "A friend and I were occupying a suite on the top deck a little aft. We were thrown from our berths by the violent pitch of the vessel and lost no time in getting on deck. There was a lot of confusion but the officers were doing all they could to launch boats and get the women and children away first. The ship was almost on her side and some of the lifeboats could not be reached. While trying to launch a boat my feet went out from under me and I slid down the inclined deck on my back. I thought sure I was going into the water. Suddenly a collapsible life raft began sliding down the deck in my wake. Heavens only knows where it came from. It gained on me and at the edge of the deck it slid under me and we went over into the water with myself on the raft. I did not touch the water and was soon picked up.

"I was going to England on a business trip and expect to make another start in a week or so."

Mrs. Kinerney of Toronto was described as "one of the bravest women of the lot" by an officer of the sunken ship, told her story in a half pathetic, half humorous way.

"I lost my savings of 18 years which I was taking to England with me, but weeping won't bring it back" said she philosophically.

"There were four girls in my cabin. Suddenly there was a big bump. We all jumped out of bed thinking the ship had grazed an iceberg. Thoughts of the Titanic disaster entered our minds. I ran out into the corridor and heard people crying and shouting for help. The ship was almost on her side, the decks being slanted at such a steep slope that it was almost impossible to stand. I saw a man lay down and slide down the deck into the water and I thought I would do the same. So I did. A man swam up to me to give me assistance. But just then a boat came up and I was taken on board."

"The impact was strong enough to wake us, but not severe enough to knock a man from his feet" said Major Morris, one of the few survivors of the Salvation Army party.

"It was a grind, rather than a crash and the Storstad struck us almost amidships. The grinding and ripping lasted about a half minute."

Lawrence Irving, son of the late Henry Irving, sacrificed his life in an attempt to save his wife.

Few of those who came out of the tragedy alive had as hard experiences as befell Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Greenway of the Salvation Army band. During the brief time that elapsed between the foundering of the Empress and their rescue each gave the other up as lost.

"I gave up all thought of saving myself and wecomed the thought of death" sad Mr. Greenway.

"I was in the water with a life preserver on and once I started to undo the straps so that my body would sink. Little did I know then that my wife was floating in the water almost at my side.

"An officer motioned us to go on deck immediately after the collision" said Mrs. Greenway. "We threw on a few wraps and went outside without feeling nervous or alarmed. However, we had no sooner reached the deck than we realized that we were in a dangerous predicament. People were rushing about and shouting and in the confusion I became separated from my husband. I don't know exactly what happened but I found myself in the water with a life preserver on. I prayed fervently for the deliverance of my husband and myself but I did not see him until long afterward.

They were on their honeymoon, having been married in Toronto last week.

Band Sergeant John Fowler of Vancouver, who was saved, told a thrilling tale of being carried down in the vortex when the ship sank. He had to struggle with corpses and wreckage to regain the surface.

"I could not sleep well and I was looking through the porthole of my stateroom when suddenly a big black shape loomed up out of the fog." said Fowler.

"It seemed only a few feet away but the distance must have been greater. Then there was a jar and a grinding, rending jolt. Before I fully realized what had happened the water began to come into my cabin. Rushing out of my stateroom I made my way up the main companionway. I saw a girl with a baby in her arms and a child of about six years following her. She implored me to show her how to put on a life preserver, so I stopped and buckled a life belt around her. I waited on board the Empress until the water closed over her decks and then jumped, but I was too late. The suction carried me down and down until I thought my lungs and eardrums would burst. Bodies cold and clamy bumped into me but I could not think of that in my dreadful battle for life. Once a big husky man threw his arm around me while we were still under the water and I had to fight to break his grip. Oh, it was dreadful, that mad battle against an unseen foe amidst those corpses and wreckage beneath the waters of the St. Lawrence. The pain was greater than anything I had ever known and it seemed ages before I rose and my head popped through the surface. The first breath of fresh air was better than anything I had ever known before. I was exhausted when a life boat picked me up."

Edward Shannon, a fireman, told of the courage of Captain Kendall.

"Captain Kendall stood upon the bridge throughout all the terrible scene directing affairs just as cooly as though nothing had happened," said Shannon.

"With a megaphone to his mouth the captain ordered his men to swing the life-boats overboard and to see that the women and children got away first. He was upon the bridge when the vessel went under the water."

Clinton R. Burt, an automobile manufacturer of Toronto, described the death of Irving as follows:

"I ran upon the promenade deck as soon as the collision occurred." said Burt. "The water had put the lights out and in the darkness we could just barely make out the moving figures. I had a difficult time finding the life preservers and while I was searching I met Irving and Mrs. Irving.

"I told them they had better don life-belts at once as the ship was in great danger and would probably go down. Irving ran back to his stateroom and came out with two life preservers. I put one of the belts upon him and he put the other one upon his wife. We went outside but could hardly walk because the deck sloped so. I managed to run up the deck and grasp the rail. Irving endeavored to follow with Mrs. Irving but the vessel lurched and both went into the water. I think the current must have carried them under the ship. The last glimpse I had of Irving he was trying to save his wife.

"He might have saved himself but for his bravery and devotion to Mrs. Irving. I jumped into the water and heard a voice crying nearby. It was a young girl who later turned out to be Miss T. Townsend of New Zealand. I helped her and we were soon picked up."

J. Patrick, of Toronto, told how he swam among the drowning men and women who clutched at him and raved in their terror of death.

"They were around me like flies," said Patrick.

"I tried to get hold of a little boy but he was insane from fear and struggled so I had to let him go.

"The ship pitched heavily just before she disappeared as though she were rolling in death agony. The water put out the fires in the boilers within a few minutes after the crash."

KINGSTON, N. Y., MAY 30, 1914.

Memorial Day was instituted to commemorate a great national sorrow, but as the tragic consequences of the Civil War have steadily grown dimmer in the national recollection the observance of the day has with corresponding steadiness grown more joyous. Sports and picnics have taken the place of weeping and prayer. We have been and still are very near to a renewal of the old feelings, through our bungling policy in Mexico. It is true that the Bible declares that "it is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting," but all of us are willing to forego that spiritual benefit rather than have our relations and neighbors sacrificed upon battle fields.

The most imaginative novelist could hardly devise a more pathetic story than that of Professor Langley, who died of grief because his flying machine wouldn't fly, while it was quite capable of doing so if he had only known how to launch it. It was eleven years ago when his last experiment resulted disastrously, and eight years ago when he died after being repulsed by everybody whom he asked for aid to pursue his efforts. Meanwhile, the Wright brothers actually succeeded in flying. We suppose that the object in resurrecting the Langley machine is to prepare an attack on the Wright patents. If this succeeds it will be a miscarriage of justice. Langley's machine would have remained among other curios at Washington but for the work of the Wrights, and while we may shed a tear or two for the disappointed Professor, fairness forbids the deprivation of the reward so well earned by the men who first [illegible] to make actual flights.

The stories to the effect that Huerta is under the influence of brandy most of the time are extremely interesting, but they are probably no more justified than the similar tales about Theodore Roosevelt which were circulated so freely before the time of his famous libel suit against an editor in Michigan. In the June Atlantic there is an article by Louis C. Simonds, who has lived thirty years in Mexico and who knows the Dictator well, in which it is set forth that "Huerta's appearance shows no traces of dissipation, and those who have business to transact with him find him invariably clear-headed." Mr. Simonds is of the opinion that the accounts of undignified all-night carousals are extremely exaggerated. It stands to reason that an individual who started as a ragged Indian boy and raised himself to the head of the Government can hardly be an habitual drunkard. Slavery to alcohol and success in life are incompatible, and reported exceptions to the rule should always be taken with several grains of salt.

If President Wilson had gone into business instead of taking up schoolteaching and politics he would undoubtedly have been a commercial Napoleon for whom hard times could hold no terrors. The other day he was called upon by a committee representing 33,167 factories in which 1,084,000 men are employed, and was asked to curtail his anti-trust program and give business a chance to revive. According to the official statement given out, the President replied that "while he was aware of the present depression of business, there was abundant evidence that it was merely psychological, that there is no material condition or substantial reason why the business of the country should not be in the most prosperous and expanding condition." If Mr. Wilson were in business just now he would first work himself into a happy mood. Then he would proceed to push his factory to its full capacity. Selling its products would be the easiest thing in the world. He could go about infusing the trade with his own happy spirit, and soon we would have a tremendous boom. Business men who do not know enough to take a course in psychology ought to seek other occupations. Perhaps it would be as well for them to become Christian Scientists. We read a statement by an exponent of that cult recently to the effect that there could be no panics if its teachings were generally accepted.

He betrays it in his far-a[illegible] centrated look, an air if [illegible] ness, and in dozen of ways [illegible] the initiated speaks as plai[illegible] he had said "I," yet it never s[illegible] occur to his profound mind [illegible] the other end of the telepath[illegible] there is someone listening wh[illegible] somehow manage to spell [illegible] mystic result of "two ar[illegible]

It is not so much a tri[illegible] men's intuition as a comm[illegible] his—well, what is it? His [illegible] or his blindness?

I suppose it is a fair exemp[illegible] tion of woman's "because," whic[illegible] man's mind is an empty sort of wo[illegible] meaningless and involving some p[illegible] culiar process of the heart rathe[illegible] than the head. But that definition is simply another proof of his lack of understanding.

Back of the comprehensive, boundless "because," there is always a trail of reasons well known to the feminine mind, but discreetly withheld. Perhaps it is childish, but to be childish is sometimes to be wise.

Occasionally the prompting of the heart helps the decision of the mind, but it seems simple enough for either to reach the conclusion independently.

No one can fairly claim infallibility for the quality, but on general principles, intuition does not lead far from the mark; and it is really only another name for ordinary insight and analysis, though some might be harsh enough to define it as "a tendency to jump at conclusions."

If there were not back of it something stronger than an unguided impulse, its shafts would be more errant, less truth-finding than they are.

Because the mind flashes its decisions quickly, half unconsciously, in some instances, it does not follow that the logical process is quite eliminated from the quality of intuition from time immemorial attributed distinctively to woman.

When a woman is questioned as to the wherefore of her "because" and the reply comes: "Oh, I don't know; I just think so, that is all," we may be morally certain that is not all; but generally there is an air of finality about it that precludes further interrogation; and so the more or less natural inference is that logic and mind are not in any way concerned.

But they are involved, none the less, and it is not for a woman to ravel the process, even though to man it sounds much like the child's simple "I know, but I won't tell!"

When a man declares his willingness—and he often does—to "rely upon woman's intuition," he does not mean her judgment or her insight; he calls it something purely feminine, apart from his own logic and strong reasoning, and so dignity is not in any way disturbed by leaning upon that side staff.

But one would call his wanderi[illegible] attention to the fact that he is r[illegible] ing upon her judgment.

I wonder if he would believ[illegible] even then, and still be willin[illegible] draw upon it?

"I played Brutus first in 1881, with John W. Albaugh as Antony and a Mr. Donaldson as Cassius. Donaldson and I concluded to get up Julius Caesar for a benefit performance in Hagerstown. Mr. Donaldson had had trouble with his teeth, and had replaced them with a brand new set. But unfortunately they didn' fit. In the midst of that great speech of Cassius in the first act, out they popped.

"He reached for them, caught them on the fly, and finished the speech with the uppers in his right hand, assuming the pose usually taken by Hamlet when giving the Alas, Poor [illegible] and [illegible] Yorick speech, with skull in hand.

"You may imagine his appearance after the popping out took place, for then everything caved in and instead of looking a man of 40, he suddenly was transformed into a man of 65. That performance was really too funny. But we played it."

The Teacher's Theory Shattered.

"Children," said the teacher to his pupils, "you should be able to do anything equally well with either hand. With a little practice you will find it just as easy to do anything with one hand as it is with the other."

"Is it?" inquired the urchin at the foot of the class. "Let's see you put your left hand in the right-hand pocket of your trousers."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Two Viewpoints.

Secretry Garrison, apropos of his refusal o interfere with the custom of christening ships with champagne, said at a luncheon:

"Yo see, this matter can be looked at from two absolutely opposite points of view. A temperance orgar, for example, once said to a shipowner.

'I was glad to see that at the recent launching you chistened your new boat with water instead of wine.'

"The shipowner, ruddy and fat, chuckled and answered in rich, husky tones:

"'Yes, indeed! It was full time to inaugurate this reform. With the present scarcity of vintage wines I'll waste no more of them on foolishness.'"—Washington Post.

Earth's Temperature.

It has long been known that the temperature below the earth's surface increases at the rate of about one degree per hundred feet, or 50 degrees per mile. If the rate of increase were constant, the temperature at the relatively small depth of 100 miles would be above the melting point of all substances under ordinary surface conditions.

munity should keep Memorial Day."

Mr. Loughran denied that a proper observation of Memorial Day fosters a military spirit. The Civil War, he said, was the best answer for the jingoes who assert that the strength of a nation decays unless it is frequently at war, for, coming after years of peace and prosperity, it had shown that the spirit and virility of American patriotism had not been lessened.

April Fool Day.

There are all sorts of theories as to the origin of the merry anniversary, but the most plausible is the one which gives the custom its use in France, about 1564. France was the first European country to adopt the reformed calendar, and as a result the New Year day was carried back to January 1, and mock calls were made on April 1, as a joke on such as had forgotten the change in the calendar.

Rough on the Old Maids.

In a quiet English village there was recently held a celebration in the schoolroom at the dedication of a new fire engine. It was a giddy evening, with three speeches by local clergymen and a long-winded oration by a bald-headed politician. The gem of the evening was the following toast: "May she (the fire engine) be like the dear old maids of our village—always ready, but never wanted!"

Woman of Observation.

A woman says that the longer a man studies the curves of a decanter the closer he is apt to imitate them on his homeward journey in the early morn.

STEINWAY

One of the contributory reasons why the Steinway Piano is recognized as may be found in the fact that since its inception it has been made under the supervision of members of the Steinway family, and embodied in it are certain improvements found in no other instrument.

It is not merely the combination of wood, felts and metals, but it the knowing how to combine them in order to produce the highest musical results which has made the Steinway the piano by which all others are measured.

THE STEINWAY

is a work of creative art which stands alone—unqualifiedly the best.

KINGSTON, N. Y., MAY 30, 1914.

Memorial Day was instituted to commemorate a great national sorrow, but as the tragic consequences of the Civil War have steadily grown dimmer in the national recollection the observance of the day has with corresponding steadiness grown more joyous. Sports and picnics have taken the place of weeping and prayer. We have been and still are very near to a renewal of the old feelings, through our bungling policy in Mexico. It is true that the Bible declares that "it is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting," but all of us are willing to forego that spiritual benefit rather than have our relations and neighbors sacrificed upon battle fields.

The most imaginative novelist could hardly devise a more pathetic story than that of Professor Langley, who died of grief because his flying machine wouldn't fly, while it was quite capable of doing so if he had only known how to launch it. It was eleven years ago when his last experiment resulted disastrously, and eight years ago when he died after being repulsed by everybody whom he asked for aid to pursue his efforts. Meanwhile, the Wright brothers actually succeeded in flying. We suppose that the object in resurrecting the Langley machine is to prepare an attack on the Wright patents. If this succeeds it will be a miscarriage of justice. Langley's machine would have remained among other curios at Washington but for the work of the Wrights, and while we may shed a tear or two for the disappointed Professor, fairness forbids the deprivation of the reward so well earned by the men who first [illegible] to make actual flights.

The stories to the effect that Huerta is under the influence of brandy most of the time are extremely interesting, but they are probably no more justified than the similar tales about Theodore Roosevelt which were circulated so freely before the time of his famous libel suit against an editor in Michigan. In the June Atlantic there is an article by Louis C. Simonds, who has lived thirty years in Mexico and who knows the Dictator well, in which it is set forth that "Huerta's appearance shows no traces of dissipation, and those who have business to transact with him find him invariably clear-headed." Mr. Simonds is of the opinion that the accounts of undignified all-night carousals are extremely exaggerated. It stands to reason that an individual who started as a ragged Indian boy and raised himself to the head of the Government can hardly be an habitual drunkard. Slavery to alcohol and success in life are incompatible, and reported exceptions to the rule should always be taken with several grains of salt.

If President Wilson had gone into business instead of taking up schoolteaching and politics he would undoubtedly have been a commercial Napoleon for whom hard times could hold no terrors. The other day he was called upon by a committee representing 33,167 factories in which 1,084,000 men are employed, and was asked to curtail his anti-trust program and give business a chance to revive. According to the official statement given out, the President replied that "while he was aware of the present depression of business, there was abundant evidence that it was merely psychological, that there is no material condition or substantial reason why the business of the country should not be in the most prosperous and expanding condition." If Mr. Wilson were in business just now he would first work himself into a happy mood. Then he would proceed to push his factory to its full capacity. Selling its products would be the easiest thing in the world. He could go about infusing the trade with his own happy spirit, and soon we would have a tremendous boom. Business men who do not know enough to take a course in psychology ought to seek other occupations. Perhaps it would be as well for them to become Christian Scientists. We read a statement by an exponent of that cult recently to the effect that there could be no panics if its teachings were generally accepted.

He betrays it in his far-a[illegible] centrated look, an air if [illegible] ness, and in dozen of ways [illegible] the initiated speaks as plai[illegible] he had said "I," yet it never [illegible] occur to his profound mind [illegible] the other end of the telepath[illegible] there is someone listening [illegible] somehow manage to spell [illegible] mystic result of "two ar[illegible]

It is not so much a tri[illegible] men's intuition as a comm[illegible] his—well, what is it? His [illegible] or his blindness?

I suppose it is a fair exemp[illegible] tion of woman's "because," whic[illegible] man's mind is an empty sort of wo[illegible] meaningless and involving some [illegible] culiar process of the heart rathe[illegible] than the head. But that definition is simply another proof of his lack of understanding.

Back of the comprehensive, boundless "because," there is always a trail of reasons well known to the feminine mind, but discreetly withheld. Perhaps it is childish, but to be childish is sometimes to be wise.

Occasionally the prompting of the heart helps the decision of the mind, but it seems simple enough for either to reach the conclusion independently.

No one can fairly claim infallibility for the quality, but on general principles, intuition does not lead far from the mark; and it is really only another name for ordinary insight and analysis, though some might be harsh enough to define it as "a tendency to jump at conclusions."

If there were not back of it something stronger than an unguided impulse, its shafts would be more errant, less truth-finding than they are.

Because the mind flashes its decisions quickly, half unconsciously, in some instances, it does not follow that the logical process is quite eliminated from the quality of intuition from time immemorial attributed distinctively to woman.

When a woman is questioned as to the wherefore of her "because" and the reply comes: "Oh, I don't know; I just think so, that is all," we may be morally certain that is not all; but generally there is an air of finality about it that precludes further interrogation; and so the more or less natural inference is that logic and mind are not in any way concerned.

But they are involved, none the less, and it is not for a woman to ravel the process, even though to man it sounds much like the child's simple "I know, but I won't tell!"

When a man declares his willingness—and he often does—to "rely upon woman's intuition," he does not mean her judgment or her insight; he calls it something purely feminine, apart from his own logic and strong reasoning, and so dignity is not in any way disturbed by leaning upon that side staff.

But one would call his wanderi[illegible] attention to the fact that he is r[illegible] ing upon her judgment.

I wonder if he would believ[illegible] even then, and still be willin[illegible] draw upon it?

Meanwhile, one accepts the tribute and deplores lack of perceptio[illegible] of Brutus in [illegible]formed tion of Julius Caesar, writes W[illegible] Phillips Dodge in The Strand, too[illegible] me to one side recently to tell about his first experience in the role.

"I played Brutus first in 1881, with John W. Albaugh as Antony and a Mr. Donaldson as Cassius. Donaldson and I concluded to get up Julius Caesar for a benefit performance in Hagerstown. Mr. Donaldson had had trouble with his teeth, and had replaced them with a brand new set. But unfortunately they didn' fit. In the midst of that great speech of Cassius in the first act, out they popped.

"He reached for them, caught them on the fly, and finished the speech with the uppers in his right hand, assuming the pose usually taken by [illegible] when giving the Alas, Poor Yorick speech, with skull in hand.

"You may imagine his appearance after the popping out took place, for then everything caved in and instead of looking a man of 40, he suddenly was transformed into a man of 65. That performance was really too funny. But we played it."

The Teacher's Theory Shattered.

"Children," said the teacher to his pupils, "you should be able to do anything equally well with either hand. With a little practice you will find it just as easy to do anything with one hand as it is with the other."

"Is it?" inquired the urchin at the foot of the class. "Let's see you put your left hand in the right-hand pocket of your trousers."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Two Viewpoints.

Secretry Garrison, apropos of his refusal o interfere with the custom of christening ships with champagne, said at a luncheon:

"Y[illegible] see, this matter can be looked at from two absolutely opposite points of view. A temperance orator, for example, once said to a shipowner.

'I was glad to see that at the recent launching you chistened your new boat with water instead of wine.'

"The shipowner, ruddy and fat, chuckled and answered in rich, husky tones:

"'Yes, indeed! It was full time to inaugurate this reform. With the present scarcity of vintage wines I'll waste no more of them on foolishness.'"—Washington Post.

Earth's Temperature.

It has long been known that the temperature below the earth's surface increases at the rate of about one degree per hundred feet, or 50 degrees per mile. If the rate of increase were constant, the temperature at the relatively small depth of 100 miles would be above the melting point of all substances under ordinary surface conditions.

munity should keep Memorial Day."

Mr. Loughran denied that a proper observation of Memorial Day fosters a military spirit. The Civil War, he said, was the best answer for the jingoes who assert that the strength of a nation decays unless it is frequently at war, for, coming after years of peace and prosperity, it had shown that the spirit and virility of American patriotism had not been lessened.

April Fool Day.

There are all sorts of theories as to the origin of the merry anniversary, but the most plausible is the one which gives the custom its use in France, about 1564. France was the first European country to adopt the reformed calendar, and as a result the New Year day was carried back to January 1, and mock calls were made on April 1, as a joke on such as had forgotten the change in the calendar.

Rough on the Old Maids.

In a quiet English village there was recently held a celebration in the schoolroom at the dedication of a new fire engine. It was a giddy evening, with three speeches by local clergymen and a long-winded oration by a bald-headed politician. The gem of the evening was the following toast: "May she (the fire engine) be like the dear old maids of our village—always ready, but never wanted!"

A woman says that the longer a man studies the curves of a decanter the closer he is apt to imitate them on his homeward journey in the early morn.

STEINWAY

One of the contributory reasons why the Steinway Piano is recognized as may be found in the fact that since its inception it has been made under the supervision of members of the Steinway family, and embodied in it are certain improvements found in no other instrument.

It is not merely the combination of wood, felts and metals, but it the knowing how to combine them in order to produce the highest musical results which has made the Steinway the piano by which all others are measured.

THE STEINWAY

is a work of creative art which stands alone—unqualifiedly the best.

EMPRESS OF IRELAND DEATH LIST NUMBERS 1032

Revised Figures Show That 355 Were Saved---Captain in Hospital in a Critical Condition ---Bodies of More Than Half of the Dead Have Been Recovered.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Quebec, May 30.—The death list in the Empress of Ireland disaster will be 1,032, according to information given out today by the Canadian Pacific line, owners of the Empress. The ship carried 1,387 persons and, according to her owners the following were saved:

First class passengers 18, second and third class passengers 131. Crew saved 206.

Quebec, May 30.—Nine hundred and ten men, women and children lost their lives in the sinking of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland after she was rammed by the collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence river, according to a revised list of the fatalities made up here today.

Four hundred and seventy-seven persons were saved, most of the survivors being in this city, cared for by the municipal authorities and the officials of the Canadian Pacific line.

The collier Storstad arrived here today under her own steam but her smashed bows gave terrific and tragic evidence of the part she played in the greatest marine disaster St. Lawrence shipping has ever known.

An investigation of the disaster is expected to be made by the Dominion government, not only to place the responsibility but to lay the ground work for legislation to provide further safeguards for life at sea.

All the stories told here by survivors emphasize one big fact:

That the victims faced death bravely in the fog and darkness of early morning and that there was no panic. As the Storstad drew back the water rushed into the gap made by her sharp steel prow and in less than 15 minutes the liner had disappeared from view in ninety feet of water.

The survivors find no fault with the officers of the liner. All that could be done was accomplished.

The Lady Grey, a government steamer, slowly crawled toward this port today with about 250 dead bodies which were picked up near the scene of the disaster The Dominion and provincial authorities united to care for the dead to hasten identification of [illegible] Oppold, 44 Broadway.

The rental of a house on the present site of the rectory barn gave opportunity for several years to continue the work. Here the number of pupils was continuously increasing, and the capacity of the converted residence was tested to its utmost. The teachers who are well remembered in this Adams street school are Jane Diamond, Ellen Lee, Lizzie Jordan and Annie Forrest.

During this time, that is in the year 1862, the Sisters of Charity were invited to take up the work that had been so well done by a line of earnest, painstaking lay teachers of whose profit report so goldenly, speaks in the lives of those who were trained under them. The Rev. Felix Farrelly secured the present convent property from a Mr. Higby, through the medium of a prominent parishioner, Jas. Booth. The Sisters, in addition to the work of teaching in the parochial school, opened an academy at their residence. It continued from then until 1911, to educate a number of the girls and the smaller boys. Sister Theophelia, now of Port Jervis, and Sister Assisium, now of Rosendale, will be best remembered by the pupils, because the former taught in the parochial school and the latter in the academy for over twenty years.

In 1867 the cornerstone of the McEntee street school was laid in the pastorate of the Rev. James Coyle. The first teachers, Messrs. Higgins, McCue and Hayden in successive order taught the boys, whilst the Sisters gave their attention in the parochial school to the girls.

In 1873, Mr. Murray gave ten thousand dollars for the construction of a school or academy for boys, and the building adjoining the church that has been known since then as the Brothers school, was erected. At first the Christian brothers took charge, but after a short time gave place to the Franciscan Brothers, who until 1895, gave not only a grammar education, but a commercial course of instruction to the children. During the pastorate of the Rev. John Duffy, Fr. Coyle's successor, an arrangement was entered into by the school No. 3 district, to have all the boys of the school district educated by the Brothers—an expedient that relieved the taxpayers from enlarging the district school for many years. Thus it was that many non-Catholic children received their education in a Catholic school, and their recollection of their religious teachers is today eulogistic of the zeal and the efficiency of the Brothers of St. Francis. The enlargement of school No. 3, disrupted the compact and the Brothers retired to their Brooklyn headquarters, leaving after them a memory that will be cherished in Rondout until the last of their pupils will have passed to his reward. The Sisters then assumed charge of both the boys and girls and have been assisted by excellent lay teachers. Ten years ago the board of regents empowered St. Mary's to hold its examinations in its own school, and this privilege enables the children to produce better results by being free from the excitement occasioned by new, strange surroundings. The children are graduated only after they have successfully for the impartation of sound Christian education.

The name of the Rev. Myles Maxwell must be fondly associated with the celebration of today, for he was the zealous priest of God, who in 1846, provided an opportunity to educate the children of his parish by building an addition to the little wooden church that was erected in 1840 on the present site of St. Mary's. The record books of St. Mary's contain this valuable and interesting statement, that bears directly upon the initial efforts of the congregation for school provision:

Poughkeepsie, Nov. 4th, 1839.

An article of agreement between James Crowley and the Rev. John Smith, on behalf of the building committee appointed by the said the Rev. J. Smith for the purpose of building a Catholic Church in Rondout, Ulster Co., State of New York.

The said James Crowley binds himself to build a church 40 feet by 34 feet in width, twelve feet high, of sound material—frame of which must be set on posts three feet high, for the sum of $400—$100 of which must be paid before the work commences, and the balance, as may be collected from the subscribers or paid in by the building committee to the said James Crowley, who binds himself to cover in the building in one month from the above date.

The execution of this contract gave to the people of Rondout a little church to worship in, but because of the smallness of the congregation and the scarcity of priests, they were unable to have a resident pastor until the summer of 1842, when the Rev. Myles Maxwell, small in stature, delicate in health, but giant-like in his zeal for souls, was appointed as the first father of the flock. In those early times the state was not so much concerned for the educational welfare of the children as it now is, and it was the practice of individuals to conduct private schools, where for a fixed fee children might receive a primary education. Mr. Groves conducted such a school on Post street and many of the children of the parish in the early forties received their training in his little school. To his credit it must be noted that, though not a Catholic, his insistance upon the pupils' attendance at Sunday school was so positive that he would assemble them at his school every Sunday at two o'clock and march them to the little wooden church of St. Mary's to receive their religious instruction. He afterwards became the teacher in what is now No. 3 school, and actually taught the Catholic catechism to the children on Saturday mornings. Father Myles Maxwell entered on his pastorate in these conditions. The parishioners were few and poor, but to conserve the faith he determined that there would be a Catholic school, where the souls as well as the minds of the future men and women of Rondout would be nourished and strengthened.

The resources of the parish could not justify the construction of the school building, but he built an ex-

EMPRESS OF IRELAND DEATH LIST NUMBERS 1032

Revised Figures Show That 355 Were Saved---Captain in Hospital in a Critical Condition ---Bodies of More Than Half of the Dead Have Been Recovered.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Quebec, May 30.—The death list in the Empress of Ireland disaster will be 1,032, according to information given out today by the Canadian Pacific line, owners of the Empress. The ship carried 1,387 persons and, according to her owners the following were saved:

First class passengers 18, second and third class passengers 131. Crew saved 206.

Quebec, May 30.—Nine hundred and ten men, women and children lost their lives in the sinking of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland after she was rammed by the collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence river, according to a revised list of the fatalities made up here today.

Four hundred and seventy-seven persons were saved, most of the survivors being in this city, cared for by the municipal authorities and the officials of the Canadian Pacific line.

The collier Storstad arrived here today under her own steam but her smashed bows gave terrific and tragic evidence of the part she played in the greatest marine disaster St. Lawrence shipping has ever known.

An investigation of the disaster is expected to be made by the Dominion government, not only to place the responsibility but to lay the ground work for legislation to provide further safeguards for life at sea.

All the stories told here by survivors emphasize one big fact:

That the victims faced death bravely in the fog and darkness of early morning and that there was no panic. As the Storstad drew back the water rushed into the gap made by her sharp steel prow and in less then 15 minutes the liner had disappeared from view in ninety feet of water.

The survivors find no fault with the officers of the liner. All that could be done was accomplished.

The Lady Grey, a government steamer, slowly crawled toward this port today with about 250 dead bodies which were picked up near the scene of the disaster The Dominion and provincial authorities united to care for the dead to hasten identification of the victims. Morgue at Rimouski, Oppold, 44 Broadway.

in the ship and to examine the nature of the gash inflicted by the collier's stem.

Fewer than half of the dead had been recovered today and it was believed that some of the corpses never would be recovered. But as fast as the river gave up its dead the bodies were taken ashore and prepared for identification.

The temporary mortuary was formerly used as a freight shed.

The first boat to arrive from the scene of the disaster brought only 11 living. Of these, one, a woman, died as they lifted her to the wharf and a little later a man died.

Then came the Lady Evelyn. On her deck among the unconscious living lay 135 corpses. Then came the tug Eureka with sixty more bodies and the morgue had to be enlarged as the original building had been filled.

Special funeral services will be held here tomorrow for the dead who went down with the Empress. Tomorrow will be a day of mourning throughout the Canadian branch of the Salvation Army, for more than 150 members were drowned in the disaster.

for the impartation of sound Christian education.

The name of the Rev. Myles Maxwell must be fondly associated with the celebration of today, for he was the zealous priest of God, who in 1846, provided an opportunity to educate the children of his parish by building an addition to the little wooden church that was erected in 1840 on the present site of St. Mary's. The record books of St. Mary's contain this valuable and interesting statement, that bears directly upon the initial efforts of the congregation for school provision:

Poughkeepsie, Nov. 4th, 1839.

An article of agreement between James Crowley and the Rev. John Smith, on behalf of the building committee appointed by the said the Rev. J. Smith for the purpose of building a Catholic Church in Rondout, Ulster Co., State of New York.

The said James Crowley binds himself to build a church 40 feet by 34 feet in width, twelve feet high, of sound material—frame of which must be set on posts three feet high, for the sum of $400—$100 of which must be paid before the work commences, and the balance, as may be collected from the subscribers or paid in by the building committee to the said James Crowley, who binds himself to cover in the building in one month from the above date.

JOHN SMITH.
JAS. CROWLEY.

Witnesses: Hugh Colgan,
John O'Reilly.

The execution of this contract gave to the people of Rondout a little church to worship in, but because of the smallness of the congregation and the scarcity of priests, they were unable to have a resident pastor until the summer of 1842, when the Rev. Myles Maxwell, small in stature, delicate in health, but giant-like in his zeal for souls, was appointed as the first father of the flock. In those early times the state was not so much concerned for the educational welfare of the children as it now is, and it was the practice of individuals to conduct private schools, where for a fixed fee children might receive a primary education. Mr. Groves conducted such a school on Post street and many of the children of the parish in the early forties received their training in his little school. To his credit it must be noted that, though not a Catholic, his insistance upon the pupils' attendance at Sunday school was so positive that he would assemble them at his school every Sunday at two o'clock and march them to the little wooden church of St. Mary's to receive their religious ingtruction. He afterwards became the teacher in what is now No. 3 school, and actually taught the Catholic catechism to the children on Saturday mornings. Father Myles Maxwell entered on his pastorate in these conditions. The parishioners were few and poor, but to conserve the faith he determined that there would be a Catholic school, where the souls as well as the minds of the future men and women of Rondout would be nourished and strengthened.

The resources of the parish could not justify the construction of the school building, but he built an extension to the rectory, and in 1862 the rental of a house on the present site of the rectory barn gave opportunity for several years to continue the work. Here the number of pupils was continuously increasing, and the capacity of the converted residence was tested to its utmost. The teachers who are well remembered in this Adams street school are Jane Diamond, Ellen Lee, Lizzie Jordan and Annie Forrest.

During this time, that is in the year 1862, the Sisters of Charity were invited to take up the work that had been so well done by a line of earnest, painstaking lay teachers of whose profit report so goldenly, speaks in the lives of those who were trained under them. The Rev. Felix Farrelly secured the present convent property from a Mr. Higby, through the medium of a prominent parishioner, Jas. Booth. The Sisters, in addition to the work of teaching in the parochial school, opened an academy at their residence. It continued from then until 1911, to educate a number of the girls and the smaller boys. Sister Theophelia, now of Port Jervis, and Sister Assisium, now of Rosendale, will be best remembered by the pupils, because the former taught in the parochial school and the latter in the academy for over twenty years.

In 1867 the cornerstone of the McEntee street school was laid in the pastorate of the Rev. James Coyle. The first teachers, Messrs. Higgins, McCue and Hayden in successive order taught the boys, whilst the Sisters gave their attention in the parochial school to the girls.

In 1873, Mr. Murray gave ten thousand dollars for the construction of a school or academy for boys, and the building adjoining the church that has been known since then as the Brothers school, was erected. At first the Christian brothers took charge, but after a short time gave place to the Franciscan Brothers, who until 1895, gave not only a grammar education, but a commercial course of instruction to the children. During the pastorate of the Rev. John Duffy, Fr. Coyle's successor, an arrangement was entered into by the school No. 3 district, to have all the boys of the school district educated by the Brothers—an expedient that relieved the taxpayers from enlarging the district school for many years. Thus it was that many non-Catholic children received their education in a Catholic school, and their recollection of their religious teachers is today eulogistic of the zeal and the efficiency of the Brothers of St. Francis. The enlargement of school No. 3, disrupted the compact and the Brothers retired to their Brooklyn headquarters, leaving after them a memory that will be cherished in Rondout until the last of their pupils will have passed to his reward. The Sisters then assumed charge of both the boys and girls and have been assisted by excellent lay teachers. Ten years ago the board of regents empowered St. Mary's to hold its examinations in its own school, and this privilege enables the children to produce better results by being free from the excitement occasioned by new, strange surroundings. The children are graduated only after they have successfully

Days That Are Past..

Elisha Lee, the brilliant counsel for the railroads in the recent arbitration proceedings in New York, said at a luncheon:

Well, the poor railroads, at any rate, have got rid of the pass evil. Cornelius Vanderbilt used to tell a story about that.

"Mr. Vanderbilt said that a man once called and asked him for a pass over the New York Central to Albany.

"'Why do you ask for a pass?' said Mr. Vanderbilt.

"'Because I'm so sensitive,' the man answered.

"'So sensitive? What's that got to do with the matter?'

"Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Vanderbilt,' the applicant explained. 'I want to go up to Albany on your line last night, and was the only man on the train that paid his fare. All the other passengers guyed me about my clothes, and, as I'm so sensitive, I don't want to go through such an unpleasant experience.'"—Chicago Record.

Poor Molars!

[illegible] Dean, who plays the part of Cassius in the production of Julius Caesar, should be cracked, [illegible] is taken from the cast, it will be useless unless it is remade by melting and recasting.

Our country was founded upon liberty and freedom as its great foundation stones; and those stones were solid and strong when first placed into position. The foreign element of slavery crept in, however, step by step, as the cotton crops increased in value, and it pounded away at our foundation stone of freedom until there was a very noticeable crack or flaw. In fact, it had eaten and beaten away at that stone until it was ready to crumble; and if it crumbled, the country, perhaps, would crumble with it. Various attempts were made to fill up that crack and to plaster and fasten it together, but the attendant success was only temporary in its effect. There was a flaw in the character of the nation that had to be eliminated. That flaw was the servitude of man. The crack came because the whole country did not live up to liberty in its dealings with mankind. The nation then and there reached a corner. It had not traveled the road that led away from freedom, but it had not traveled the road that led directly to freedom. It was taking an oblique course. It became more and more apparent that the correct moral course was not being pursued. It became apparent that the real and true meaning of freedom could not be taught to and learned by the children of this nation so long as slavery existed in or upon any part of it with the consent of the government of the stars and stripes. The people became more sensible of the import of this blot upon the land of the free. The crack in the foundation stone of freedom became wider and greater. The cement of patience and peace could hold it together no longer. The country had to be recast just as does the bell that is cracked. When a bell is recast it has to undergo practically the same procedure as when it is originally made. When the liberty foundation stone of a nation must be recast, it means that the nation must undergo practically the same revolution as when the nation is ushered amongst other nations upon the principle of freedom. Our flag at that time consisted of a corner sky of blue with stars therein and the red and white stripes. If our flag had truly represented our nation at that time, if it had been a true reflection of our national character, there should have been several black stars to represent certain states in the south, and to represent that true liberty did not exist throughout the whole length and breadth of the land.

In the south liberty was for one class but slavery was for another class. The elimination of this blot would have financially affected the people of that section very greatly. They owned great cotton fields. The care of these fields required a great amount of labor. The cotton producers owned their horses and mules which they bought and sold for so many dollars and cents. They also owned their human help that they also bought and sold for so many greenbacks and coppers. It is usually or often the case that when the elimination of or change in existing conditions affects a certain class financially, that those within that class lose sight of any principle involved. The decrease or proposed decrease in their bank book blinds them as to any uplifting of mankind that may be involved. This was the case and these were the conditions in the south prior to the sixties. The south wanted to sustain slavery and the north wanted to destroy it. We had sectional differences leading to civil strife. The crisis had to come and it came. The descendants of those who had struggled to create this land of liberty, willingly suffered and shed their blood that such liberty might be preserved and held out equally to all. United companies of patriotic men left their families to suffer pain and hardship that liberty might survive. The true spirit of patriotism animated them just as it had their forefathers four score years and more before, and just as it did

Elisha Lee, the brilliant counsel for the railroads in the recent arbitration proceedings in New York, said at a luncheon:

Well, the poor railroads, at any rate, have got rid of the pass evil. Cornelius Vanderbilt used to tell a story about that.

"Mr. Vanderbilt said that a man once called and asked him for a pass over the New York Central to Albany.

"'Why do you ask for a pass?' said Mr. Vanderbilt.

"'Because I'm so sensitive,' the man answered.

'So sensitive? What's that got with the matter?'

'Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Vanderbilt,' the applicant explained. 'I went up to Abany on your line last spring or tolling I was the only man on the tower; but I earn train that paid his fare. made. be used for many ean, who plays the part should be cracked, produc- is taken from the cast, it will be use- less unless it is remade by melting and recasting.

Our country was founded upon liberty and freedom as its great foundation stones; and those stones were solid and strong when first placed into position. The foreign element of slavery crept in, however, step by step, as the cotton crops increased in value, and it pounded away at our foundation stone of freedom until there was a very noticeable crack or flaw. In fact, it had eaten and beaten away at that stone until it was ready to crumble; and if it crumbled, the country, perhaps, would crumble with it. Various attempts were made to fill up that crack and to plaster and fasten it together, but the attendant success was only temporary in its effect. There was a flaw in the character of the nation that had to be eliminated. That flaw was the servitude of man. The crack came because the whole country did not live up to liberty in its dealings with mankind. The nation then and there reached a corner. It had not traveled the road that led away from freedom, but it had not traveled the road that led directly to freedom. It was taking an oblique course. It became more and more apparent that the correct moral course was not being pursued. It became apparent that the real and true meaning of freedom could not be taught to and learned by the children of this nation so long as slavery existed in or upon any part of it with the consent of the government of the stars and stripes. The people became more sensible of the import of this blot upon the land of the free. The crack in the foundation stone of freedom became wider and greater. The cement of patience and peace could hold it together no longer. The country had to be recast just as does the bell that is cracked. When a bell is recast it has to undergo practically the same procedure as when it is originally made. When the liberty foundation stone of a nation must be recast, it means that the nation must undergo practically the same revolution as when the nation is ushered amongst other nations upon the principle of freedom. Our flag at that time consisted of a corner sky of blue with stars therein and the red and white stripes. If our flag had truly represented our nation at that time, and had been a true reflection of our national character, there should have been several black stars to represent certain states in the south, and to represent that true liberty did not exist throughout the whole length and breadth of the land.

In the south liberty was for one class but slavery was for another class. The elimination of this blot would have financially affected the people of that section very greatly. They owned great cotton fields. The care of these fields required a great amount of labor. The cotton producers owned their horses and mules which they bought and sold for so many dollars and cents. They also owned their human help that they also bought and sold for so many greenbacks and coppers. It is usually or often the case that when the elimination of or change in existing conditions affects a certain class financially, that those within that class lose sight of any principle involved. The decrease or proposed decrease in their bank book blinds them as to any uplifting of mankind that may be involved. This was the case and these were the conditions in the south prior to the sixties. The south wanted to sustain slavery and the north wanted to destroy it. We had sectional differences leading to civil strife. The crisis had to come and it came. The descendants of those who had struggled to create this land of liberty, willingly suffered and shed their blood that such liberty might be preserved and held out equally to all. United companies of patriotic men left their families to suffer pain and hardship that liberty might survive. The true spirit of patriotism animated them just as it had their forefathers four score years and more before, and just as it did

NEW PARISH SCHOOL TO BE DEDICATED ON SUNDAY

Elaborate and Beautiful Ceremony Will Mark the Formal Dedication of the $60,000 School Property of St. Mary's Parish---History of the School and List of Contributors.

The dedication of the new school of St. Mary's parish will take place Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the auditorium. Preceding the formal exercises there will be a procession of the societies of the church under the direction of Michael J. Rafferty as marshal. In the school hall there will be rendered a fine program by the choir of the church and a chorus of school children under the direction of Prof. William H. Rieser, organist.

The principal addresses will be delivered by the Right Rev. Monsignor Joseph F. Mooney, vicar general, and the Right Rev. Monsignor John Reilly of Schenectady. Mgr. Mooney is too well known in Kingston to need any extended notice and the people of Rondout, where he lived so long, will well remember him and his eloquence on all occasions. Mgr. Reilly is known as one of the most convincing pulpit orators in the northern part of the state and has frequently been heard at St. Mary's Church. His sermon on this occasion will not lack any of its usual warmth and eloquence.

The dedication program follows:

Invocation to the Holy Spirit.
Procession .....School Children
Interlude.
America.....Orchestra and Organ
Chorus—Vesper Hymn.. Beethoven
Prayer.
Chorus—Glorious in Thy Name, Almighty God .....Mozart
Sermon, Right Rev. Mgr. John Reilly
Chorus—The Heavens are Telling the Glory of God.....Haydn
Informal Address,
Right Rev. Joseph F. Mooney, V. G.
Chorus—Holy Holy, Lord God Almighty .....Gounod
Chorus—Tantum Ergo....Mascagni
Chant—Holy God We Praise Thy Name. To be sung by the Entire Congregation.
Postlude.....Orchestra and Organ

The program published in connection with the dedication also contains a history of the parish which was written by the Rev. John J. Hickey, and is as follows:

It is to the honor of this congregation, that the cause of education has appealed to the pastors and to the people coeval almost with the appointment of the first resident pastor at St. Mary's in 1842, and continuing during successive administrations of sixty-eight years, until today. This building is the sixth school house that has been provided [illegible] of the church. They were educated in the old building at the corner of Crown and John streets, recently acquired by the Kingston Leader, and were called to their studies by the same bell which still calls the reluctant scholar of today from his sports.

The discipline of those days was severe, and all intercourse between the tutors and the scholars took place in Latin. "Licet ne mihi exire" asked the student who wished to retire, when the emphatic "mimo" or very frequently the decided "non" was returned to him. When the roll was called those who were present answered "adsum," and for the occasional reckless one who played hookey in the recesses of the Brabant hills "abest" was gleefully shouted by a mischievous comrade. Geography and mathematics were recited in English, but in the Latin and Greek recitations even the rules were all stated in the Latin tongue. Commencement was held about the middle of September, and was the great gala day of Kingston. The students marched in a body to the Bogardus tavern where in an upper room the Free Masons held their lodge. There they were awaited by the board of trustees. After a formal reception by the board, colored servants, of whom there were many in Kingston, brought in cakes and wine, and the students were ceremoniously invited to take a glass of wine with the trustees. After this stately and solemn refection was over a procession was formed, and during the ringing of the three bells which the town possessed the trustees and the students marched to the academy. Those bells were the bells of the First Dutch Church, the academy and the court house. On arriving at the academy the students came to a parade rest in open ranks, the trustees passed through and on being seated in the large assembly room of the academy an address in Latin was delivered by one of the trustees which greatly edified the assembly, all of whom at that time had Dutch preached to them, and heard Dutch talked throughout the rest of the year.

After this came a public examination which continued down to my own day as a student at the academy, and then followed dramatic performances at the court house. It was in the court house that Cato and Douglas were played to admiring houses. John C. Spencer appeared at one time as Young Norval, Peter S. Wynkoop as Randolph and Clarissa Cantine as Lady Randolph. "The Road to Ruin," then regarded as a most instructive comedy, frequently was played with great ability. The commencement exercises terminated with a grand ball at DeWall's tavern on North Front street, and this was attended by the gentry of Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Rhinebeck, Hudson, Catskill and many visitors from Albany.

The academy met with great success from its commencement. Mr. Principal Addison is said to have been a man of courage, of learning and of first class educational talent, and the academy under him took a high rank which it earned and maintained by works and not by boasting. It continued without interruption through the war of the American revolution until that disastrous 16th tension to the little church, and opened it in 1846 for the instruction of the children. They came to it, and so many that it was necessary to utilize the sanctuary of the church. How consoling is it to know that the Rondout boys of the middle forties were instructed not only in a Catholic school, but in the very presence of God, and that with the rudimentary knowledge, they were fortified with that spiritual strength that has made the present generation the residuary of the loyalty of their forbears.

May the memory of Father Myles Maxwell be enshrined in the loving memory of every child that will cross the threshold of this temple of knowledge, for he was the lover of the little ones who grew up to make historic their allegiance to progressive Christian education.

Mr. Cronin of Saugerties has the distinction of being the first teacher in the improvised school and Mr. Mulvaney was the second. There are yet some in the parish who remember the latter very distinctly. Jas. McGinnis, John White, Daniel Murphy, James Norton, Bernard Healey, Mrs. Henry Penny, Anna Thompson, Mrs. McKiernan, Mrs. Barry and Mrs. Clare all have fond recollections of the early school days, and recall with satisfaction the efforts that were made to give them every spiritual opportunity.

The Rt. Rev. Mgr. Mooney, V. G., who officiates today in the service of dedication, received his preliminary education in Rondout in a school where now stands St. Peter's Church, and the Rev. Wm. Penny as well is the boast of Rondout's early educational provision.

When in 1847, it was found necessary to build a new church for the rapidly growing congregation, the little church and school still continued their ceaseless activities, as the walls of the present edifice reared their heights to Heaven, and continued until construction made it imperative to build another school in the cemetery in the rear of the church. Here taught at various times Stephen Hardy, who also acted in the capacity of sexton, and who is well and kindly remembered, and whose widow still happily survives—Mr. Shurter, who had been at one time a Christian brother, and who came well equipped for his work, and Messrs. Riordan, Crown, Carr, Roe and Mr. Brennan and his sister, Elizabeth. Because of the increasing demands made for tenantry in the city of the dead, it became necessary some few years later to find another location for the departure to the scenes of war, and therefore it is a parcel of land many times endeared to the hearts of the people of Kingston, of the people of Ulster and the citizens of New York. If time permitted it would be a labor of love to expand this address into a history of the old academy, into a sketch of the lives of the men who were among its students. Much of that history has been written; much remains unwritten, and it is to be hoped that at some day in the not far distant future some graduate of the old academy will complete what has been so ably begun.

On the 18th day of July, 1864, the Kingston academy was by its board of trustees transferred by a grant of trust to the Kingston Board of Education. One of the covenants of that trust was that it should forever be maintained as a free public high school in which students of Kingston should be prepared to enter any college in the United States, and that if at any time that covenant failed of observance and fulfillment the property thus granted should revert to the academy trustees.

The completion of this building will effectuate a termination of the trust thus created, and by operation of law will result in the devolution of the title of the triangular lot and of the present academy building to and upon the trustees of the Kingston Academy which recently have been reorganized as a body corporate by the regents of the university of the state in anticipation of the coming event. As a former student of the Kingston Academy, as one of its existing trustees under the charter of the regents of the university and in view of the speculation and discussion as to the use to which the trustees will devote the property I am authorized to say, and take this appropriate occasion for saying that it is the intention of the board forever to dedicate the property to some important public use, precisely what has not been definitely determined, but a suggestion which I commend to the people of Kingston is the advisability of considering the wisdom of the demolition of the present edifice, and the laying out of the historic triangle as a public park to be forever dedicated to and used by the people of Kingston. Not only would this be appropriate, but it seems to me the most felicitous use to which to devote the place. Its historic importance, the traditions and memories which cluster about it, the distinguished citizens of Kingston whose names have been associated with it, in my mind makes it imperative forever to preserve it inviolate for the public benefit.

Assembled in this ancient capital of the commonwealth on a day dedicated to the memory of the historic dead the people of Kingston recall with pride that for over two and a half centuries they have devoted their energies and their means to the free education of the people. When they tell us that the tone of the thought of the day is lowering and material, when they tell us that men and women are sordid and selfish, that they care only for themselves, and not for others, we have but to look at the foundation of this imposing edifice to consider the purposes of the men who had the foresight, the courage and the wisdom that the citizens of the state have been moulded and hardened into usefulness. Thus it was at Dodona, at Delphi, at Alexandria, at Athens, at Corinth, at Rome and at Antioch that men were taught to think and act, and to become great citizens of great states, for we never should forget what Pericles said in that immortal oration over the Athenian dead in the Peloponesian war: "We regard one who takes no interest in public affairs not as a harmless, but as a useless character." And thus it is that I say to the people of Kingston that yours is the responsibility of maintaining here the worship of noble ideals, and of defending those ideals from invasion by any vicious theory from without or from any desecration of indifference by yourselves from within. The standing of this institution is your opportunity, and you may multiply your own lives through its influence into an eternity of unselfish service to that ancient city we so proudly call our home.

Superintendent M. J. Michael was then introduced by Mr. DeWitt and spoke as follows:

Superintendent Michael's Address.

We meet today midway between Kingston and Rondout to perform a simple ceremony which in the fullness of time will unite all sections of this community in one harmonious whole. It marks a point in the progress of our city when all should forget past differences due to local causes and unite in the onward movement for a greater Kingston.

The alumni, students and teachers of Kingston and Ulster academies each cherishing the traditions and splendid achievements of their respective schools with respect and admiration for each other, may transfer their loyalty and service to the new without in the least sacrificing their veneration for the old.

On this beautiful eminence which nature, the hand of man and more than a century of time have prepared as a setting for this classic temple, the past and present stand on the threshold of the future.

The problems of the nineteenth century fraught with great moment were bravely and wisely dealt with by its people. Theirs was the vision which saw the duty of the state to foster those institutions that quicken the intelligence of its citizens, provide for a broader culture, and secure a deeper comprehension of the fundamentals of our complex civilization.

That century saw the economic life of its people completely revolutionized. It witnessed the rapid transition in industrial arts from goods made by hand in the household where master and journeyman labored in harmony to produce the necessaries of life to the highly organized factory system with its division of labor down to the last analysis and the everlasting struggle for mastery between the forces of capital and labor. It applied steam to turn the mighty engines of industry and annihilate time in transportation of goods and people over the steel bands that girdle the globe, and to force the leviathans of the sea from continent to continent disdaining the winds and tides and scoffing at the storm. It brought under control a mysterious force by which in-passed the preliminary Regents' examinations.

The McEntee street school outlived its forty-six years' usefulness, and a new modern, sanitary building, capable of accommodating all the children of the parish, was planned and today is constructed. Its dimensions are 83x137 feet. There are twelve class rooms, many meeting rooms, recreation room and a large assembly hall. The cost of construction of the building was $50,000. The cornerstone of the building was laid by Mgr. M. J. Lavelle, V. G., on Sunday, September 28, 1913, in the presence of a large number of people. The Rev. John J. Hickey is the pastor of the parish, under whose direction the school was built. He is assisted by the Rev. Stephen P. Connolly and the Rev. Daniel J. Gilmartin.

The history of the parish reveals a persistent effort to give to the children a rounded education. Its reward has been the large number of boys and girls who have given their lives to the service of God in the sanctuary and in the convent. The roster of Rondout's priests, includes in its large embrasure, Mgr. Mooney, Fathers Penny, Slattery, Jas. J. Dougherty, Boyle, Burns, McGill, Keane, Larkin and Carey.

May this last, and most substantial effort in behalf of Catholic youth always stand for the truth and for the right, and may the children who go out from it be mindful of the Christian teaching imparted therein, and hand down to successive generations the incalculable influence of blameless lives.

What has the future in store for educational development? We cannot cast aside those essentials which the experience of the ages has taught us are true and good to take up every fleeting fancy of the faddist just because it is new.

This new school shall in many respects be like the ones which will soon pass. The so-called cultural studies, language and literature, history and art, mathematics and science will still form the major part of our work.

The pursuit of these studies has developed our greatest leaders of thought, our men and women eminent in the learned professions, and the genius of constructive statesmanship. However, not all who shall enter here will possess the ability to lead, the peculiar aptitude needed for professional life, or the desire for a purely cultural course.

If we could but draw aside the curtain that hides the future, I believe we would see these halls thronged by boys and girls no less intelligent, not one bit less capable who are drawn here by the opportunities offered them to prepare for the vocations of life.

These boys are the ones who shall become the promoters of commerce, the captains of industry and the leaders of finance. These girls also will be among those efficient women who in an enlightened age shall share with the men in full sympathy and accord all the duties and responsibilities that make for the conservation of the home and the state.

If the future does not provide opportunity, not alone for cultural development, but also for vocational training, then this building might as well have been left in the clay bank and quarry and mines from which its elements came.

This building is not to be used by the young exclusively, but by all our people for any legitimate purpose under the provisions of the law.

From this center with these spacious class rooms and the auditorium accommodating 1,400 people, there shall go forth to this entire community every good influence that will make life pleasanter and easier to live and that will banish from our souls hatred and envy and install therein charity for the erring and weak and lift us into the clear atmosphere of a happy optimism.

EXERCISES AT WILTWYCK

Decoration Day opened dark and gloomy this morning but shortly after seven o'clock the sun broke through the clouds and gave promise of a clear day for the exercises that were held in the city in commemoration of the day and the purpose for which it was set aside.

Early this morning the school children began to gather at the various schools carrying American flags and large bouquets of flowers with which to strew the graves of the hero dead. Trolley cars were kindly furnished by the Kingston Consolidated Railroad Company to convey the girls to the cemeteries while the boys and members of Pratt Post marched in a body to the graves.

Broadway was lined with gaily dressed crowds carrying flowers with which to decorate the graves and the entrance to Pine Grove avenue was lined with people to watch the children march into the cemetery. As the cars discharged their cargoes of girls dressed in white it presented a pretty scene as they lined up on the side of the road to await the arrival of the boys and the old veterans who marched down Broadway to the martial music of the Colonial City Band.

At the cemetery entrance a platform had been erected where the veterans were seated and from which the orators of the day spoke. Major Everett had charge of the exercises at Wiltwyck cemetery and after the band had played an appropriate selection prayer was offered by Chaplain A. T. Drake after which the large assemblage joined in singing "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Lincoln's Gettysburgh address was delivered by George Greene of Kingston Academy.

The orators of the day were Senator Palmer, who gave a glowing and patriotic address and Mayor Canfield, whose speech appears on another page.

THE FEAST OF WEEKS.

Shabuoth, Feast of the First Fruits, Begins on Sunday.

Shabuoth, "The Feast of Weeks," also called "The Feast of the First Fruits" falls according to the Jewish calendar, on the sixth of Sivan which will occur this year on the thirty-first of May. Its name is derived from the seven weeks which elapsed between the departure of Israel from Egypt and their arrival at Mt. Sinai. Like its companion holiday, the Feast of Passover, it too, has both an agricultural and a historical aspect. This was the early harvest season when the first of the wheat, baked in two loaves of bread, was brought as an offering of gratitude, and as a token of man's dependence upon the goodness of God. Historically it carries us back in memory to the promulgation of the Ten Commandments, when Israel accepted the new moral code and religious legislation, and was aroused for the first time to the consciousness of its new spiritual task and destiny. The Ten Commandments are the Magna Charta of Religion. Having secured political freedom, Moses found it necessary to give his people religious freedom. The new nation must be buttressed upon religious obligation. They may be a Kingdom, but they must be a Kingdom of priests, a holy nation.

Shabuoth has gained a stronger and a more impressive hold today by entwining its symbolism about the impressionable child. "Confirmation" is the ceremony expressive of religious consecration. We publicly affirm by this ceremonial that our children, the first ripe fruits of our reigous schools, shall stand morally and religiously in the same enthusiastic and receptive attitude as did their fathers at the foot of Mt. Sinia.

Shabuoth has a distinctly modern and indispensable appeal to the individual. It teaches first of all, that religion, as a necessity of life, is the actuating motive and sanction of personal, social and national character. Secondly, it champions the cause of Religious Freedom as the most highly prized privelege and possession of human race.

Services will be held at Temple Emanuel on Saturday evening, May 30, at 7:30 and on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. Immediately after the regular services on Sunday morning there will be an address to the children of the religious schoool.

CARRANZA ASSUMES DEFIANT ATTITUDE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, May 30.—The insistence by the White House that no agreement has been reached at Niagara Falls as to the main propositions necessary for the pacification of Mexico, caused high officials in Washington to attach grave significance to the note Urquidi delivered to the mediators after they had consented to receive it under pressure from Washington. This note is said to be the final word from the Constitutionalist general regarding the rights of his party to participate in the proceedings at Niagara Falls. It showed that Carranza intends to pacify Mexico in his own way and was a diplomatic warning to outsiders to keep hands off his country.

With Carranza assuming a defiant mood and Huerta strengthening his position with the 250 machine guns and more than 15,000,000 rounds of ammunition reported to have been landed within the past few days, successful mediation remains a remote possibility, according to the general view here. The correspondence between Carranza and the mediators showing his replies to invitations to join them, indicates that the rebel chief never will agree to an armistice with Huerta even if he should take part in the mediation conferences.

MOTOR RACE STARTS AT INDIANAPOLIS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Motor Speedway, Indianapolis, Ind., May 30.—Out of a great cloud of smoke from the exhausts of thirty snorting racing cars, Chassagne, in his English Sunbeam shot across the starting line at 10 o'clock sharp and the great international 500 mile race was on. He was followed two seconds later by Tetzlaff in a Maxwell, and the other drivers followed in succession. Boillot, the French favorite, in his Peugot, was the last to leave the starting point.

Fisher was driving at the rate of 75 miles an hour when he crossed the starting line. Howard Wilcox, in a Gray Fox; Tetzlaff, in a Maxwell, and Chassagne in a Sunbeam, were even with him, closely followed by the other entrants.

At the end of the third lap, Christianens in an Excelsior led by a small margin, while Jules Goux, the French winner of last year's race, in a Peugeot, had pushed into second place and was pushing the Belgian hard.

Christiaens made the first lap in one minute forty-five and ninety-five hundredths seconds, an average of 85.75 miles an hour.

The first withdrawal was the Ray car driven by Broc, at the end of the ten broken shaft.

The work of the pit-men in making the changes was extremely fast. Ralph Mulford stopped his Mercedes at the pit, replaced a bursted tire and was back in the race in 38 seconds.

Bob Burman lost four laps on account of engine trouble after his twelfth lap.

The first accident of the race was the overturning of the Sunbeam car driven by Chassagne, as he was making the turn to enter the backstretch.

Chassagne was seriously cut about the head and face and was rushed to the Emergency Hospital.

Percey Miller, his mechanician, was only slightly bruised.

At the end of one hundred miles Thomas was leading, having covered the distance in one hour nine minutes 35:45 seconds.

The old record for one hundred miles is 1:13:37:25 made by Tetzlaff in a Fiat in Indianapolis May 30, 1912.

For his record today Thomas wins the G. and J. Trophy.

Following Thomas and only a minute behind him at the end of the hundred miles was Duray, in a baby Peugeot, the other leaders in order were:

Guyot in a Delage; Christiaens, Excelsior; Wishart, Mercer; Bragg Mercer and Dawson in a Marmon. Less than one second separated the two Mercer cars.

NEW PARISH SCHOOL TO BE DEDICATED ON SUNDAY

Elaborate and Beautiful Ceremony Will Mark the Formal Dedication of the $60,000 School Property of St. Mary's Parish---History of the School and List of Contributors.

The dedication of the new school of St. Mary's parish will take place Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the auditorium. Preceding the formal exercises there will be a procession of the societies of the church under the direction of Michael J. Rafferty as marshal. In the school hall there will be rendered a fine program by the choir of the church and a chorus of school children under the direction of Prof. William H. Rieser, organist.

The principal addresses will be delivered by the Right Rev. Monsignor Joseph F. Mooney, vicar general, and the Right Rev. Monsignor John Reilly of Schenectady. Mgr. Mooney is too well known in Kingston to need any extended notice and the people of Rondout, where he lived so long, will well remember him and his eloquence on all occasions. Mgr. Reilly is known as one of the most convincing pulpit orators in the northern part of the state and has frequently been heard at St. Mary's Church. His sermon on this occasion will not lack any of its usual warmth and eloquence.

The dedication program follows:

Invocation to the Holy Spirit.
Procession .....School Children
Interlude.
America.....Orchestra and Organ
Chorus—Vesper Hymn.. Beethoven
Prayer.
Chorus—Glorious in Thy Name, Almighty God .....Mozart
Sermon, Right Rev. Mgr. John Reilly
Chorus—The Heavens are Telling the Glory of God.....Haydn
Informal Address,
Right Rev. Joseph F. Mooney, V. G.
Chorus—Holy Holy, Lord God Almighty .....Gounod
Chorus—Tantum Ergo....Mascagni
Chant—Holy God We Praise Thy Name. To be sung by the Entire Congregation.
Postlude.....Orchestra and Organ

The program published in connection with the dedication also contains a history of the parish which was written by the Rev. John J. Hickey, and is as follows:

It is to the honor of this congregation, that the cause of education has appealed to the pastors and to the people coeval almost with the appointment of the first resident pastor at St. Mary's in 1842, and continuing during successive administrations of sixty-eight years, until today. This building is the sixth school house that has been provided by the pastors of the church. They were educated in the old building at the corner of Crown and John streets, recently acquired by the Kingston Leader, and were called to their studies by the same bell which still calls the reluctant scholar of today from his sports.

The discipline of those days was severe, and all intercourse between the tutors and the scholars took place in Latin. "Licet ne mihi exire" asked the student who wished to retire, when the emphatic "mimo" or very frequently the decided "non" was returned to him. When the roll was called those who were present answered "adsum," and for the occasional reckless one who played hookey in the recesses of the Brabant hills "abest" was gleefully shouted by a mischievous comrade. Geography and mathematics were recited in English, but in the Latin and Greek recitations even the rules were all stated in the Latin tongue. Commencement was held about the middle of September, and was the great gala day of Kingston. The students marched in a body to the Bogardus tavern where in an upper room the Free Masons held their lodge. There they were awaited by the board of trustees. After a formal reception by the board, colored servants, of whom there were many in Kingston, brought in cakes and wine, and the students were ceremoniously invited to take a glass of wine with the trustees. After this stately and solemn refection was over a procession was formed, and during the ringing of the three bells which the town possessed the trustees and the students marched to the academy. Those bells were the bells of the First Dutch Church, the academy and the court house. On arriving at the academy the students came to a parade rest in open ranks, the trustees passed through and on being seated in the large assembly room of the academy an address in Latin was delivered by one of the trustees which greatly edified the assembly, all of whom at that time had Dutch preached to them, and heard Dutch talked throughout the rest of the year.

After this came a public examination which continued down to my own day as a student at the academy, and then followed dramatic performances at the court house. It was in the court house that Cato and Douglas were played to admiring houses. John C. Spencer appeared at one time as Young Norval, Peter S. Wynkoop as Randolph and Clarissa Cantine as Lady Randolph. "The Road to Ruin," then regarded as a most instructive comedy, frequently was played with great ability. The commencement exercises terminated with a grand ball at DeWall's tavern on North Front street, and this was attended by the gentry of Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Rhinebeck, Hudson, Catskill and many visitors from Albany.

The academy met with great success from its commencement. Mr. Principal Addison is said to have been a man of courage, of learning and of first class educational talent, and the academy under him took a high rank which it earned and maintained by works and not by boasting. It continued without interruption through the war of the American revolution until that disastrous 16th tension to the little church, and opened it in 1846 for the instruction of the children. They came to it, and so many that it was necessary to utilize the sanctuary of the church. How consoling is it to know that the Rondout boys of the middle forties were instructed not only in a Catholic school, but in the very presence of God, and that with the rudimentary knowledge, they were fortified with that spiritual strength that has made the present generation the residuary of the loyalty of their forbears.

May the memory of Father Myles Maxwell be enshrined in the loving memory of every child that will cross the threshold of this temple of knowledge, for he was the lover of the little ones who grew up to make historic their allegiance to progressive Christian education.

Mr. Cronin of Saugerties has the distinction of being the first teacher in the improvised school and Mr. Mulvaney was the second. There are yet some in the parish who remember the latter very distinctly. Jas. McGinnis, John White, Daniel Murphy, James Norton, Bernard Healey, Mrs. Henry Penny, Anna Thompson, Mrs. McKiernan, Mrs. Barry and Mrs. Clare all have fond recollections of the early school days, and recall with satisfaction the efforts that were made to give them every spiritual opportunity.

The Rt. Rev. Mgr. Mooney, V. G., who officiates today in the service of dedication, received his preliminary education in Rondout in a school where now stands St. Peter's Church, and the Rev. Wm. Penny as well is the boast of Rondout's early educational provision.

When in 1847, it was found necessary to build a new church for the rapidly growing congregation, the little church and school still continued their ceaseless activities, as the walls of the present edifice reared their heights to Heaven, and continued until construction made it imperative to build another school in the cemetery in the rear of the church. Here taught at various times Stephen Hardy, who also acted in the capacity of sexton, and who is well and kindly remembered, and whose widow still happily survives —Mr. Shurter, who had been at one time a Christian brother, and who came well equipped for his work, and Messrs. Riordan, Crown, Carr, Roe and Mr. Brennan and his sister, Elizabeth. Because of the increasing demands made for tenantry in the city of the dead, it became necessary some few years later to find another location for the school and the scenes of war, and therefore it is a parcel of land many times endeared to the hearts of the people of Kingston, of the people of Ulster and the citizens of New York. If time permitted it would be a labor of love to expand this address into a history of the old academy, into a sketch of the lives of the men who were among its students. Much of that history has been written; much remains unwritten, and it is to be hoped that at some day in the not far distant future some graduate of the old academy will complete what has been so ably begun.

On the 18th day of July, 1864, the Kingston academy was by its board of trustees transferred by a grant of trust to the Kingston Board of Education. One of the covenants of that trust was that it should forever be maintained as a free public high school in which students of Kingston should be prepared to enter any college in the United States, and that if at any time that covenant failed of observance and fulfillment the property thus granted should revert to the academy trustees.

The completion of this building will effectuate a termination of the trust thus created, and by operation of law will result in the devolution of the title of the triangular lot and of the present academy building to and upon the trustees of the Kingston Academy which recently have been reorganized as a body corporate by the regents of the university of the state in anticipation of the coming event. As a former student of the Kingston Academy, as one of its existing trustees under the charter of the regents of the university and in view of the speculation and discussion as to the use to which the trustees will devote the property I am authorized to say, and take this appropriate occasion for saying that it is the intention of the board forever to dedicate the property to some important public use, precisely what has not been definitely determined, but a suggestion which I commend to the people of Kingston is the advisability of considering the wisdom of the demolition of the present edifice, and the laying out of the historic triangle as a public park to be forever dedicated to and used by the people of Kingston. Not only would this be appropriate, but it seems to me the most felicitous use to which to devote the place. Its historic importance, the traditions and memories which cluster about it, the distinguished citizens of Kingston whose names have been associated with it, in my mind makes it imperative forever to preserve it inviolate for the public benefit.

Assembled in this ancient capital of the commonwealth on a day dedicated to the memory of the historic dead the people of Kingston recall with pride that for over two and a half centuries they have devoted their energies and their means to the free education of the people. When they tell us that the tone of the thought of the day is lowering and material, when they tell us that men and women are sordid and selfish, that they care only for themselves, and not for others, we have but to look at the foundation of this imposing edifice to consider the purposes of the men who had the foresight, the courage and the wisdom passed the preliminary Regents' examinations.

The McEntee street school outlived its forty-six years' usefulness, and a new modern, sanitary building, capable of accommodating all the children of the parish, was planned and today is constructed. Its dimensions are 83x137 feet. There are twelve class rooms, many meeting rooms, recreation room and a large assembly hall. The cost of construction of the building was $50,000. The cornerstone of the building was laid by Mgr. M. J. Lavelle, V. G., on Sunday, September 28, 1913, in the presence of a large number of people. The Rev. John J. Hickey is the pastor of the parish, under whose direction the school was built. He is assisted by the Rev. Stephen P. Connolly and the Rev. Daniel J. Gilmartin.

The history of the parish reveals a persistent effort to give to the children a rounded education. Its reward has been the large number of boys and girls who have given their lives to the service of God in the sanctuary and in the convent. The roster of Rondout's priests, includes in its large embrasure, Mgr. Mooney, Fathers Penny, Slattery, Jas. J. Dougherty, Boyle, Burns, McGill, Keane, Larkin and Carey.

May this last, and most substantial effort in behalf of Catholic youth always stand for the truth and for the right, and may the children who go out from it be mindful of the Christian teaching imparted therein, and hand down to successive generations the incalculable influence of blameless lives.

floating old glory fro[illegible] the topmost pinnacle of every publi[illegible] school in its fertile plains and valle[illegible]s and on its mountain tops.

The walls which are rising here today represent the toil, the liberal treasure and the unselfish sacrifice of the present generation laid upon the altar of civil pride and public duty that we may transmit to posterity our inherited institutions and ideals vigorous and active by the exercise of their highest functions and enriched by the accumulated knowledge of a century's work.

What has the future in store for educational development? We cannot cast aside those essentials which the experience of the ages has taught us are true and good to take up every fleeting fancy of the faddist just because it is new.

This new school shall in many respects be like the ones which will soon pass. The so-called cultural studies, language and literature, history and art, mathematics and science will still form the major part of our work.

The pursuit of these studies has developed our greatest leaders of thought, our men and women eminent in the learned professions, and the genius of constructive statesmanship. However, not all who shall enter here will possess the ability to lead, the peculiar aptitude needed for professional life, or the desire for a purely cultural course.

If we could but draw aside the curtain that hides the future, I believe we would see these halls thronged by boys and girls no less intelligent, not one bit less capable who are drawn here by the opportunities offered them to prepare for the vocations of life.

These boys are the ones who shall become the promoters of commerce, the captains of industry and the leaders of finance. These girls also will be among those efficient women who in an enlightened age shall share with the men in full sympathy and accord all the duties and responsibilities that make for the conservation of the home and the state.

If the future does not provide opportunity, not alone for cultural development, but also for vocational training, then this building might as well have been left in the clay bank and quarry and mines from which its elements came.

This building is not to be used by the young exclusively, but by all our people for any legitimate purpose under the provisions of the law.

From this center with these spacious class rooms and the auditorium accommodating 1,400 people, there shall go forth to this entire community every good influence that will make life pleasanter and easier to live and that will banish from our souls hatred and envy and install therein charity for the erring and weak and lift us into the clear atmosphere of a happy optimism.

In view of the fact that Gibson, for many years the foremost fight promoter in New York, had a reputation for accurate judgment concerning fighters, one must give more than the average consideration to his remarks.

There is no denying the fact that Coffey has a marvelous physique. For a big man he is lightning fast on his feet. He has a terrible punch, can stand a lot of punishment, and he's game to the core. These are the things, together with experience, that make men champions. All that Coffey seems to lack is sufficient experience, but Gibson says he will get it under his management.

Coach Harper, of Notre Dame University, claims he has secured wonderful results with a little device, something on the order of a telegraph instrument, which he designed for the purpose of speeding up sprinters.

The sprinters toe the mark. The starting gun is fired, and at the very instant it is, Harper touches a little key something on the order of a telegraphic key. A little ball rolls. The sprinters must try to get away from the finish line even before the little ball begins to roll.

"Many a race, especially in the short dashes, is lost at the starting line," declares Harper. "A slow start ruins many a runner's chance for victory, even if he does come along with a whirlwind finish. When it is figured that the difference between a star sprinter and a mediocre runner is sometimes measured only by two or three yards, it will be seen what a big advantage is gained in getting away from the starting mark at the head of the field.

"My little instrument was designed to teach the men to get away fast. When they found that they had to try to beat an instrument that was as fast almost as lightning you can bet that they were all tension, all energy, all concentration on the starting line. They had their minds only on the quick start. And the instant the gun flashed they were away.

"The instrument has, in my mind, proved a big success, for it has speeded up the boys in getting away—and that was my idea in installing it."

Isn't it funny what a difference just a few months will make? Ban Johnson, Garry Herrmann, et al., (in January and February): "Any player who jumps Organized Baseball and signs up to play with the Feds will never, under any circumstances, be permitted to play in Organized Baseball again. We are through with him, forever and forever."

And now, Ban, Garry and all the [illegible]al's are working overtime in and [illegible]t of the law courts in an effort to [illegible]in back the players who jumped. Ban, Garry and the O. B. gang (in [illegible]e winter months): "The Feds are [illegible]joke. They won't open the sea[illegible]n.

Baltimore Feds opening—Attend[illegible]ce 20,000.

Brooklyn Feds opening—Attend[illegible]ce 18,000.

Buffalo Feds—Opening attendance [illegible],000 (rainy day, too).

Pittsburgh Feds opening—Attend[illegible]ce, park capacity.

And the same with the other Fed [illegible]enings.

Also to demonstrate what a real [illegible]e they are—on Organized Base[illegible]ll—the Chicago Feds outdrew both [illegible] Cubs and White Sox in a triple [illegible]fflict in Chicago a few Sundays [illegible]o.

The man, who was said [illegible]e slightly under the influence of [illegible]lowing bowl, came into the store [illegible]t 9 o'clock and told Mr. Widman [illegible]vild yarn about an attempt that [illegible] to be mde to blow up the store [illegible] and escape with the money it [illegible]ained. The man said he was in [illegible]aloon on Railroad avenue earlier [illegible]he evening and had overheard the [illegible] discussed. His story was so wild and improbable that Mr. Widman had him ejected from the store, which closed as usual at 10 o'clock. The Busy Street Liar as usual heard the story and added a few trimmings to the effect that Mr. Widman sat up all night in the store heavily armed awaiting the arrival of the safe blowers. Mr. Widman said this morning that after the store closed he went home to bed, but that fact will not feaze the B. S. L.

FIELD OF SPORTS.

Notes of Baseball, Pugilism, and Other Lines of Athletics.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 30.—Jack Dillon of Indianapolis was awarded the popular decision over Battling Levinsky, the eastern light heavyweight in a slow ten round bout here last night. Dillon had the better of Levinsky in every round except the eighth.

Kansas City, Mo., May 30.—Mike Gibbons of St. Paul administered a severe beating to Vic Hanson of Los Angeles here last night, the latter's seconds throwing up the sponge in the sixth round.

Denver, Colo., May 30.—Johnny Kilbane, champion featherweight boxer of the world last night knocked out Benny Chavez in the second round. Chavez was completely outclassed by the Cleveland fighter at all times.

San Francisco, May 30.—Leach Cross was given the decision over Red Watson at the end of their 20 round bout here last night. Watson made an unexpectedly good showing and held the New Yorker on even terms in a majority of the rounds.

Roy Hartzell.

As we moistily melt and swelter,
As we hurry helter-skelter,
Far away from any kind of shelter,
In these torrid days of May,
It is pleasant to remember

Or the raw winds of November,
As we wipe the sweat away.

Memorial Day

On a great national holiday like to-day, many people find at the last minute that there is some little thing they have forgotten whose possession is essential to the enjoyment of the day.

Where can it be had quickly?

Nothing will answer the question so well and so promptly as the advertising columns of their favorite newspaper.

Each day demonstrates in its own particular way the great public service rendered by newspaper advertising.

Unless you read the advertising in your newspaper you are not alert to your opportunities.

* * * *

In view of the fact that Gibson, for many years the foremost fight promoter in New York, had a reputation for accurate judgment concerning fighters, one must give more than the average consideration to his remarks.

There is no denying the fact that Coffey has a marvelous physique. For a big man he is lightning fast on his feet. He has a terrible punch, can stand a lot of punishment, and he's game to the core. These are the things, together with experience, that make men champions. All that Coffey seems to lack is sufficient experience, but Gibson says he will get it under his management.

Coach Harper, of Notre Dame University, claims he has secured wonderful results with a little device, something on the order of a telegraph instrument, which he designed for the purpose of speeding up sprinters.

The sprinters toe the mark. The starting gun is fired, and at the very instant it is, Harper touches a little key something on the order of a telegraphic key. A little ball rolls. The sprinters must try to get away from the finish line even before the little ball begins to roll.

"Many a race, especially in the short dashes, is lost at the starting line," declares Harper. "A slow start runs many a runner's chance for victory, even if he does come ... it is figured that the difference between a star sprinter and a mediocre runner is sometimes measured only by two or three yards, it will be seen what a big advantage is gained in getting away from the starting mark at the head of the field.

"My little instrument was designed to teach the men to get away fast. When they found that they had to try to beat an instrument that was as fast almost as lightning you can bet that they were all tension, all energy, all concentration on the starting line. They had their minds only on the quick start. And the instant the gun flashed they were away.

"The instrument has, in my mind, proved a big success, for it has speeded up the boys in getting away—and that was my idea in installing it."

Isn't it funny what a difference just a few months will make? Ban Johnson, Garry Herrmann, et al., (in January and February): "Any player who jumps Oragnized Baseball and signs up to play with the Feds will never, under any circumstances, be permitted to play in Organized Base... all again. FIELD OF SPORTS

Notes of Baseball, Pugilism, and Other Lines of Athletics.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 30.—Jack Dillon of Indianapolis was awarded the popular decision over Battling Levinsky, the eastern light heavyweight in a slow ten round bout here last night. Dillon had the better of Levinsky in every round except the eighth.

Kansas City, Mo., May 30.—Mike Gibbons of St. Paul administered a severe beating to Vic Hanson of Los Angeles here last night, the latter's seconds throwing up the sponge in the sixth round.

Denver, Colo., May 30.—Johnny Kilbane, champion featherweight boxer of the world last night knocked out Benny Chavez in the second round. Chavez was completely outclassed by the Cleveland fighter at all times.

San Francisco, May 30.—Leach Cross was given the decision over Red Watson at the end of their 20 round bout here last night. Watson made an unexpectedly good showing and held the New Yorker on even terms in a majority of the rounds.

Roy Hartzell.

Hot Liners.

As we moistily melt and swelter,
As we hurry helter-skelter,
Far away from any kind of shelter,
In these torrid days of May,
It is pleasant to remember
Those big snow drifts last December,
Or the raw winds of November,
As we wipe the sweat away.

* * * *

The ball season might be said to be in full swing now with Connie Mack's aggregation out in front.

* * * *

Giants are now within a short jump of first place in the National League owing to the fact that Charlie Herzog's Reds rammed the Pirate craft yesterday.

A lot of fans wasted practically the entire afternoon yesterday watching the Boston Braves give one of their sickly imitations of ball playing.

Umpire Silk O'Loughlin has designed a new mask for his own use with extensions to protect the ears. It would not be surprising to see Mr. Chill enter the baseball field in a coat of mail, judging from recent demonstrations.

When the Giants were playing in St. Louis a local clergyman called at the hotel where they were stopping one Sunday to congratulate Mathewson on his stand against playing the National game on the Sabbath. The clerk made a few mysterious inquiries and then said to the parson: "Sorry, sir, but Mathewson is out playing golf."
